Are they smarter?

Now that Geraldo has decided to go legit and only discuss "socially important issues," I can hardly wait to find out how far his ratings will fall. I wouldn't be a bit surprised to see him back on the porn-shock track before too long, doing his usual schtick.

I have observed that a great many politicians have crooked mouths. I don't want to sound like a Lumarckian, but is it possible this phenomenon is a result of talking out of the sides of their mouths all the time?

Imagine the potential for nationwide mayhem if King's birthday celebration were held in the mid-summer heat. When still alive, King would march thousands of blacks -- many unemployed and with nothing better to do -- into curse the residents (who were busy minding their own business) for being racists. The whites had worked hard for generations to build nice places to live. The idea of helping blacks pull themselves up by their bootstraps sounds good. But, hey, that's not your bootstrap, that's my neck.

Oy, the stories that haven't been told! Oy, the people that want to change "history!" Oy, we sure hear about it again and again.

AIDS is natural selection in action.

I attribute Eisenhower's vindictive fury against the Germans to his frustration at the ease with which the German General Staff thwarted his sophomoric efforts to attain military greatness. Opinions may differ on Patton, yet in the memoirs of the Kraut generals show he was the only Yank they feared. Did you catch the obit last June of Brig. Gen. Elliot Thorpe, who was warned by Dutch codebreakers in Java of Jap plans to attack Hawaii and the Philippines? Who in hell didn't know their intentions?

John Silber, who is running for governor of Massachusetts with great fanfare, is not exactly a straight arrow. First, he wimps out of converting to Judaism, then he confesses, after years of considering himself a Presbyterian, that his father was Jewish (Boston Sunday Globe, Feb. 11, 1990). A Democrat who votes for Reagan and Bush, a law and order booster who opposes capital punishment, a Yale Divinity School student (watch out for them!) who later dropped out of a Texas law school and ended up with a Ph.D. in philosophy, Silber discounts the Sermon on the Mount by hinting it led to the gas chambers. He supported Judge Garrity's forced busing disaster in Boston. He feels for the little man, yet is probably the highest-paid university president (Boston U.) in the land. He dislikes Jesse Jackson, comparing his oratory to Hitler's, but said if he (Silber) made it to the White House, he would give Jesse a seat in his cabinet. When president of the U. of Texas, he was a leading racemixer, but opposed bilingual education. Obviously, Silber plucks a few heartstrings that arouse some friendly vibes in conservatives, but considering his overall track record, would you buy a second-hand yarmulke from this man?

Regarding the "Romanian thing," as George Bush might call it, those who have learned to look for the hand of Zion in American foreign policy decisions should note that American approval of Ceausescu -- as manifested by his visits to the U.S. and Romania's receiving most-favored nation status during the 1970s -- was not solely a reward for his merveick stance towards the Soviet Union. Romania was the only East Bloc country not to break relations with Israel after the Six-Day War in 1967, giving it a "middle-man" role in American-Soviet maneuverings in the Middle East. In consideration of this diplomatic plum, Washington turned a very blind eye on Ceausescu's domestic brutality.

In view of the time lost in locating non-kosher products in supermarkets, should we not persuade managers to set up non-kosher sections? I suspect it would be a great financial success and be a welcome relief from the elbowing of those other pushy customers.

I moved from Texas to the minority "miracle state" a few years ago in hopes of enjoying the cultural benefits of a city like Boston. As of February 22, the city has had 22 murders since the start of the year, most in a community called Roxbury, many of whose citizens want to change its name to Mandela. Suffice it to say that the cultural benefits are becoming increasingly life-threatening. Since living in Beantown, I've noticed types of behavior that belie the liberal dogmas shoveled down my throat since grade school. Blacks don't want equal rights; they want black power. One day, a friend handed me a stack of old Instaurations and suddenly I realized how little I knew about this magazine, now that I know who I am and what I must do. United we stand; divided we're falling.

Some inner city athletes in integrated suburban high schools, after staying late for athletic practice, must take a cab each day (some do it all year) to their ghetto abodes. The schools pay the cab fare! This strikes me as outrageous.

George Bush phoned Mandela, "All Americans rejoice in your release." All Americans, huh? I don't recall George or his "little brown ones" consulting me! I'm a white male and haven't been consulted on anything for 25 years.

I've been reading various pro-white publications for several years, and I cannot recall ever seeing any advertisement for Instauration in any of them. Instauration has the quality to appeal to a vast audience of intellectually starved whites. There is tremendous potential here; what's going on?

Editor's note: A few right-wing mags (trash) would take our ads; most wouldn't. What's going on is that Instauration has just enough money to make it to the printers each month — but not enough for chancy and expensive advertising. Our circulation growth depends entirely on word of mouth.

The Republican Party is nothing but a national Tammany Hall for voters who can't stomach Democrats. It's filled with truckers, opportunists and the power hungry, and it will stay in the White House indefinitely, though its local power bases will inevitably shrink. The Democrats' skill at coalition politics and ballot bribery and the media's ability to shape popular opinion cannot be beat. Left-wing agit-prop will make the pro-abortion spiel very fashionable and, undoubtedly, millions of women will consider the Republican Party collapses over abortion? That is what such issues are for. A new party will emerge to take its place. Let's hope it won't be as rotten, as decrepit and as infested with truckers.

The Dispossessed Majority should be translated into Russian. The Soviets might make it into a bestseller, and make the author a ruble millionaire.

When and if there is a Second Coming, it is doubtful if BBC World Service will give it the awestruck attention they have given the release of Nelson Mandela, whose every word is taken as gospel. One announcer did ask a black African woman journalist, albeit in the most respectful tones, whether a black-ruled South Africa might have some of the little problems the rest of Africa has had. Barely suppressing her anger, she retorted, "What problems?" Yes, BBC is terribly preoccupied about democracy in Africa, that is, in the tiny southern tip, where at least some people still have it, but not for much longer!

The Guinness Book of World Records has a

many compendia of trivia, this typically British anybody out there remember why McWhirter's

How about inventing some better words to describe ourselves and our opponents? "Mino" is a jazzier word than "minorityite." We could call ourselves "majors," but that doesn't have the same zing. "Minorities" and "majorities," as well as "minoritarians" and "majoritarians, are as flat as they are cumbersome.

I was in West Germany last summer, a few months before the Wall came down. I found the country prosperous, the people polite and friendly. What struck me was the overall efficiency. All gadgets worked, everything happened on time. I walked on 50 escalators and they all functioned perfectly. Hitches, goofs or mistakes almost never occurred. That's the good news. The bad news is that most Germans are completely cowed or extremely cautious.

The secret of the success of the Jews, like all men, is that they play on people's basic dishonesty. Liberals are not liberal, but shameless hustlers. Where the Jew has the edge is that he is more rational about things in the short term. In the long term, the Jew soils his own nest by bringing the whole house down on his head. Shades of Samson!

No Trump-bashing, please. We men have got

lots of giggos are going to suddenly fall in love

A Jewish comedienne had this to say about the collapse of communism in Europe on the David Letterman show: "Oh, I think it's great!
Now we'll have a whole new group of people to country..." This illustrates how well entrenched they feel they are.

Paul, a black African, has been my friend since we first met 25 years ago when he was working his way through graduate school as the night desk clerk at my Washington (DC) apartment house. I watched the development of his family life since the day he brought over his wife and six children from Ghana. I was pleased to help Paul secure his first job as a government statistician. While Paul is a decent type (he's an Olympian church), his African brood is a different story. The oldest boy has spent time in a Maryland reformatory. The oldest girl gave birth out of wedlock. The second oldest girl, the real bane of Paul's life, became partially deranged following a bout with LSD. Two years ago, Paul's wife, Elizabeth, made a month-long visit to her Ghanaian homeland. She took along her deranged daughter to consult a local witch doctor about "banishing the demons." Mother was advised to throw away the arsenal of medication prescribed for her daffy daughter by more conventional shrinks at the Johns Hopkins University Hospital in Baltimore. Whereupon, the girl went completely nuts -- not only psychi­ cally but amorously. She fell for a Ghanaian buck who was two years her junior. One thing, as they say, led to another and loverboy found himself imported all the way to the Maryland suburbs, presumably as an unwed sexual playing for the demented daughter. The baby was born three months ago.

cants for tourist visas at the U.S. Embassy in

According to their Crazy Old Book, Jews and dinosaurs were created in the same week. This may partially explain what Arnold Toynbee had in mind when he referred to Jews as “fossil people.” But being Paleolithics has not hindered Jews from maintaining a palpable presence in the camp of the goys from that time to this. John Foster Fraser (1866-1936), the once-famous British journalist, now deliberately unremembered (he authored 20 books now in the Library of Congress), wrote something called The Conquering Jew, published by Funk (of Funk and Wagnalls). In it, he came to the conclusion that Jews were in charge of just about everything in the early WWI era. How often that theme has echoed and re-echoed. It may be that this game is winding down. Evidence keeps accumulating that world Jewry is about to make a last stand in North America. They have shucked Marx and Lenin wholesale in the last two decades while conducting a preliminary Fortress America ingathering. Their Palestinian leper colony is only a diversion, a welfare nightmare no Jew with a dime has ever had any intention of moving to unless at gunpoint from a co-religionist. The flood of Soviet Jews may be the last act of the immense outflow from Europe which began after 1918 and especially after 1933, culminating in the global swamping by millions under the remarkable cover provided by the Holohoax story. Enough Big Six “survivors” have surfaced globally to account for a significant slice of the claimed death toll.

In contemporary North America, Fraser’s Conquering Jew is indeed a reality. But he had better work for a tolerable situation for all and not just his Chosen, as he may have nowhere left to run if he fouls this nest.

Someone should remind Richard McCulloch -- he of the moral high ground -- that the substitution of the abstract for the concrete is a sin in any revolution. We need combined strategies, such as David Duke’s infiltration of the establishment and Tom Metzger’s trash ing the establishment. In their different ways, these two political pawns are acting instead of merely knowing.

BBC World Service continues to devote regular coverage to the Rushdie affair, no doubt because Moslems continue to agitate noisily for his demise. In a recent talk program, one prominent left-wing woman politician, the kind who not long ago could be expected to praise racial integration to the heavens, said that the sentence of death pronounced on Rushdie by the Ayatollah had convinced her that multicultural societies are themselves the cause of racism. Sometimes the road to the truth takes a strange detour, but the important thing is the destination.

Many Christians were happy to hear Sammy Davis Jr. thank Jesus at an awards ceremony some weeks ago. The happiness was short-lived, however, as the convert to Judaism “retracted” his thanks to Jesus, saying he was just caught up in the moment.

Like the Episcopal Church, which has become queer, the Catholic Church is a dying institution. It’s become a political party advocating radical policies, such as anti-abortion, which most Catholics feel is a matter of individual choice and of no concern to the church. Coupled with the exposure of the huckstering Protestants, Christianity leaves the whites nothing to cling to. Either they’ll form their own religion or they’ll perish. The collapse of Christianity is necessary to free whiteness from his slavery to Jewish egalitarianism. Christianity was always just a spin-off from Judaism anyway. Good riddance! Whether whiteness will form a survival ideology, I personally doubt, but at least he has no Christianity to rationalize and encourage his genocide. I notice Instauration still gets letters from people who object to its Jewish egalitarianism. Christianity was not just his Chosen, as he may have nowhere left to run if he fouls this nest.

West Germany’s 30,000 Jews are treated as moral saints by the country’s state-controlled TV. Hardly a week passes without a profile of a barding rabbi from Heidelberg moaning publicly over The Past.

Noriega’s Israeli buddies (true to form) dropped him faster than they and their man Reagan dropped Oliver North. What low theater it all is!

In the aftermath of the recent Bronx arson in which 87 died, I’d like to recommend that Washington mandate a seven-day waiting period for anyone buying a book of matches.

Until recently, the English knew that, deep down, everyone would like to be a Limey. They just knew that. Their institutions repeated the line over and over again. When America joined in the imperialist racket, Americans sent forth religious missionaries and -- ahem! -- soldiers to places like Puerto Rico, Cuba and the Philippines. Their mission was to help educate the Irish both have the good sense to reproduce, and both these nations have most of the same racial characteristics as the ones McCulloch admires. In Paris a few years ago, I saw the musical production of Can-Can. The women were breathtakingly beautiful. After the performance, I and a couple of my friends invited three of the ladies to join us. They were every bit as beautiful close up -- and they were all Polish. They explained that the French mesdemoiselles do not have the good legs and derrieres that the show required.

I cannot believe that Solidarity is going to press for repatriations from Germany when it could more easily make some deals for factories and services and do its own people some real good. I would think that, above all else, Solidarity would be interested in food, clothing, shelter, potable water, heat in the winter and machines to plow the fields. I drove from Danzig to Warsaw and saw the most deplorable conditions imaginable. It was a nightmare. People do the work of animals and animals do the work of machines. The worst Negro shack in Dixie is a mansion compared to the average house in Poland. Poor Lech, he really did something. Too bad his people cannot follow through.

We only have one “fight” a month in our home -- who gets to read Instauration first!

Back in the Robber Baron turn-of-the-century days of Morgan, Frick and William Randolph Hearst, a bearded Lithuanian Jew from Boston by name of Bernard Berenson, wrote the book on the Fast Shuffle. As a poor Harvard graduate, Berenson became the “art adviser” of a prominent Boston hostess, Isabella Gardner -- a job that eventually propelled Berenson into his lifelong career of “authenticating” the paintings of the great masters. As his short lists of acceptable art were drafted, the included paintings and sculpture would soar in value. A hefty slice of the revenues they commanded -- from the pocketbooks of such as J. Pierpont Morgan -- would go into the itchy palms of Berenson himself, largely to fix up his palatial Italian villa, I Tatti, and its 40,000-volume library. Working first at a flat rate for Lord Duveen, a racial cousin, then on a percentage, and finally on the basis of a guarantee and a percentage of profits, Berenson proceeded to filch from the filthy rich, passing off a Titian as a Giorgione and the work of other imposters as the real thing. In his later years, Berenson’s scam was carried out with increasing sloppiness, prompting museum curators around the world to wonder if their “priceless treasures” were not more the creation of the expatriate Jew than of European culture.
ERNEST HEMINGWAY -- A HEMINGWAY HERO

PROBABLY THE MOST celebrated and most controversial American writer of the 20th century has been Ernest Miller Hemingway, who drank, fought, cursed, wrote and boasted his way into the literary hall of fame, along the way winning four women. Having created the Hemingway Hero, he struggled to live up to (or down to) his self-prescribed hedonistic ethic: "What's good is what feels good after and what's bad is what feels bad after." Among his many virtues or vices, "Papa" Hemingway was an anti-Semite.

His friends ribbed him about this glaring social boo-boo, playfully calling him Dr. Hemingstein. His son, Dr. John Hemingway, frankly acknowledged his father's anti-Jewish sentiments. He remembered a time when Papa, planning an African safari, told a friend that he did not want any Jews along. Germans were all right, but no Jews.

Those with a Freudian bent might trace Hemingway's anti-Semitism back to an event in his earliest infancy. Peter Griffin, in his book, Along with Youth (p. 7), tells us, "Dr. Lewis pronounced the baby [Ernest] perfect. Yet one Sunday in September while Grace [Hemingway's mother] was in Chicago, Clarence [Hemingway's physician father], without an anesthetic, circumcised his son." This operation, though by no means uncommon in 1899, was probably not as common among Gentiles as it is today. Perhaps Ernest resented this "Jewish scar."

Hemingway's feelings towards Jews shone forth in his first published novel, The Sun Also Rises. The author's unsympathetic portrayal of Robert Cohn contained such remarks as: "Cohn had a wonderful quality of bringing out the worst in anybody" (p. 98); "The lying bastard! But he's just so awful" (p. 101); "He makes me sick, and he can go to hell" (p. 102); "He was an ass . . . (p. 143); "He's got this Jewish superiority so strong that he thinks the only emotion he'll get out of the [bull]fight will be being bored" (p. 162); "That kike!" (p. 164); "Why don't you see when you're not wanted, Cohn? Go away. Go away, for God's sake. Take that sad Jewish face away" (p. 177).

The Sun Also Rises can be taken as a cautionary tale of the sad state in which the white race now finds itself. WW1 had just ended, and with it went a world dominated by the genius and organizational skill of Northern European man. Disillusionment settled in over the West like a buzzard squating on a battered nest.

Jake Barnes is the novel's protagonist. He suffered a wound in WWI that left him unable to function sexually. His aching love for Lady Brett Ashley can never be consummated. Cohn, the Jewish character, has a short fling with Brett. Lady Brett, a heavy drinker, is much to admire in Hemingway. He brought an unquestionably masculine presence into American literature. He was openly defiant of homosexuals, effeminate heterosexuals and domineering females. He never broke with Ezra Pound when that poet was accused of treason, and sent Pound a check upon his release from the looney house. (The Russians were not the only ones to lock their critics up in psychiatric hospitals.)

Like so many 20th-century American writers, Hemingway was burdened with mental problems. Rather than go softly into that dark night, shortly after dawn on July 2, 1961, he pointed his favorite 12-gauge Boss shotgun at his head, pulled the trigger with his toe and fired both barrels into his brain. He was buried in the small Ketchum, Idaho, cemetery beneath the awesome Sawtooth Mountains.

As happens so often in such cases, Hemingway's anti-Semitism did not prevent him from taking a Jewess, Martha Gellhorn, as his third wife. Nor did it prevent him from siding with world liberalism, world communism and world Jewry against Franco in the Spanish Civil War. Nor did it prevent him from writing propaganda outbursts against Hitler and even doing a little shooting for the Allies when they chased the Germans out of France.

Despite his meretricious behavior and his long flirtation with Castro, there is much to admire in Hemingway. He brought an unquestionably masculine presence into American literature. He was openly defiant of homosexuals, effeminate heterosexuals and domineering females. He never broke with Ezra Pound when that poet was accused of treason, and sent Pound a check upon his release from the looney house. (The Russians were not the only ones to lock their critics up in psychiatric hospitals.)

"All stories, if continued far enough, end in death," Hemingway once wrote, "and he is no true story-teller who would keep that from you." Papa writes no more, but, while living, he had enough courage to write truthfully and talk honestly in some of his novels and short stories. Can we say as much about the American writers who followed him?

PAGE 6 -- INSTAURATION -- MAY 1990
Arians are to whites as whites are to blacks.

This statement, shocking as it may be, is worth examining on its merits.

Whites look down on blacks for four main reasons: Blacks are, on average, less intelligent, less law-abiding, less hard-working and less monogamous. Most clear-eyed observers are aware of this, whether or not they admit it publicly. What many observers seem to overlook is that, judged by the same four standards, Asians have every bit as much reason to look down on whites. (By “Asians,” we refer to Japanese, Chinese and Koreans.)

The average black IQ in this country is 85; the average white, 100; and the average Asian, 110. The relative rankings on the SAT confirm these disparities. In 1983, 0.28% of all blacks scored higher than 700 on the math section of the test, compared to 3.3% of all whites and 8.6% of all Asians. Achievement on the verbal portion shows a similar ordering, with Asian leadership less pronounced: 0.093% of blacks scored above 700, 0.94% of whites, and 1.4% of Asians. (Remember that, for many Asians, English isn’t even their native language.) A white student in a science or math class at a top college will be grateful for the effect the blacks in his class have on the grade curve; that same student knows it will be hard to score near the top of a class with a significant Asian contingent.

FBI statistics indicate that, per capita, a black is approximately 10 times as likely as a white to commit one of the four major violent crimes: assault and battery, murder, armed robbery and rape. An Asian is much less likely to commit any of these crimes than a white. To be sure, Chinese gangs have infiltrated the heroin trade in New York and elsewhere. But how often does one hear of an Asian rapist or mugger? (One of the best indicators of criminality is low IQ, and Asians have fewer of the hardcore, criminally inclined morons.) By far, the most law-abiding ethnic group in the country is the Japanese Americans.

Although statistics are not compiled regarding what is surely a more subjective matter, hard work, Asians are undoubtedly, by and large, harder-working than any other group. The most obvious examples for New Yorkers are the first-generation Korean greengrocers, who put in 16-hour days, starting at the wholesale market at 4 A.M. and ending late in the evening. Anybody who’s ever had Asian coworkers will attest to their work ethic.

Finally, when it comes to the family, even readers of the mass media are acquainted with the fact that 59.2% of the births born in the U.S. during this past decade were illegitimate. The white illegitimate birthrate hovers between 15% and 20%. The Asian rate, on the other hand, is below 10%. The Asian divorce rate is also much lower than that of the other two races.

What will the effect of these differences be in the U.S.? Asians will continue to pull ahead of the other ethnic groups (with the exception of the Jews) in this country.

Genetic Differences

Interestingly enough, Asians are to white people as whites are to blacks in regard to many physical characteristics as well. Many of these genetic differences contribute directly to behavioral differences. U.S. Army records show that Asians of both sexes have the lowest level of the male hormone, testosterone, in their bodies; whites rank in the middle, and blacks have the most (in both sexes). Not surprisingly, male hormone levels have been highly correlated with aggression and violence in all sorts of environments. Certainly, the behavior patterns of the respective races would lend credence to this notion. A glance at the secondary (as well as primary) sexual characteristics would also tend to bear this out. Blacks are the most muscular race; Asians, the least. Blacks have the deepest voices; Asians, the highest. Naturally, as with intelligence, there are exceptions. But, as with intelligence, they are just that—exceptions.

Another area of difference is energy levels. Asians seem to be the most energetic race, capable of working from dawn to dusk; blacks, the most lethargic. (A walk through the Negro quarter of any town will show an enormous number of people just sitting around. The same is true in Africa, whereas in Asia or Chinatown, people are constantly bustling around.)

Another difference is inhibitions. Whites are often struck by the uninhibitedness of blacks, who tend to behave like slightly inebriated whites—loud, sloppy, amorous and more inclined to play than to work. The same parallel exists between Asians and whites—whites tend to act like drunken Asians. (To put these parallels in reverse, the next time you reflect on what boring, wimpy nerds most Asians are, remember that blacks tend to think the same of whites.)

A not particularly relevant, but nonetheless interesting sidelight: Blacks have the highest concentration of sebaceous (odor-producing) glands in their bodies (thus, the stereotypical idea that blacks smell). Asians have the least, and whites once again fall in the middle of this trait (thus, in Asia, the same stereotypical feelings regarding whites).

One theory advanced regarding the intelligence of Asians is that because they are more homogeneous than white population groups, the bell curve describing their IQ distribution, while averaging out at 100, is higher and narrower than the white curve. Consequently, they have far fewer people on either side of the two standard deviation ranges. This means fewer morons, but also fewer people with IQs above the 170 range, and these are the people who enable civilization to progress. This theory has been advanced to explain why the scientific and industrial revolutions occurred in the West and not in Asia. (Another theory is that Asian society, being stricter and more community-oriented, discourages the type of independent thought common to inventors.) In any case, in an area where scientific inventions are shared and global communications are instantaneous, this difference will be of less import.

The West in Decline

As readers of this magazine are well aware, America is headed towards demographic disaster. The black and Hispanic birthrates far outstrip that of whites. Adding to this dysgenic effect, illegal Hispanic aliens swarm over our southern borders daily. Cuba sends us her most incorrigible criminals and we are powerless to send them back. Our welfare rolls grow at an unprecedented pace. Our nation spends more and more of its energies trying to find and root out “discrimination” (of both the racial and sexual varieties) rather than on productive pursuits. Our nation’s “moral” guardians, the media masters, have a stranglehold on the kind of information which is made public, and prevent honest discussion of our real problems. Hollywood and the networks bombard us with egalitarian propaganda. Our ghettos expand, crack prolif- erate, and our literacy rate falls further and further behind that of other civilized nations.
By the mid-21st century, our demographics will have "progressed" to the point where almost all big-city mayors and their city councils will be black. With more and more incapable and bufoonish Negroes in power (witness Marion Barry, Carl Stokes, Coleman Young, Jesse Jackson, et al.), more socialistic programs will be instituted, and the resulting higher taxes will sap the vitality of the cities.

As blacks continue to multiply, secure in the knowledge that welfare will provide for their offspring, their ghettos will spread. Where newscasters now euphemistically say that our "inner" cities are rotting, their 21st-century counterparts will simply say that our cities are beyond repair.

To be sure, there will be a white backlash (we're already seeing it to a limited extent), but the media masters will mute its strength. True, the Jews' interests will be less directly aligned with those of blacks (again, a rift we're already seeing); but the Jews will still not want people to think in racial terms.

To a great extent, the curse inflicted by the legacy of slavery and a porous southern border is also being experienced by Europe. Britain, thanks to its role as the leader of the Commonwealth, now has a large number of West Indians (read: blacks) living within her borders, with all the attendant problems. English bobbies, famous in the past for not even carrying guns, now patrol armed. France has a sizeable population of North Africans and a not insignificant number of blacks, the legacy of her colonial empire. West Germany has an immigrant population of Turks and even a few blacks, the latter courtesy of the large American military presence. Amsterdam, once a beautiful city, is now overrun by the dregs of the international drug culture. Perhaps if Eastern Europe can completely escape the tyranny of communism, its bemused inhabitants will forge ahead, but they still have a long way to go.

Asia Ascendant

Japan, Taiwan, Singapore, Hong Kong and Korea have none of these problems. Their populations all have a healthy race consciousness and view their recent achievements with pride. At the same time, they grow increasingly aware of our racial problems, and have no qualms about discussing these problems among themselves. They are also coming to realize, as former Japanese Prime Minister Nakasone found out to his embarrassment, that they are not supposed to voice these thoughts publicly.

Nakasone committed the unpardonable sin of pointing out that America's literacy rate suffered because of the large number of blacks, Puerto Ricans and Hispanics in this country. He was later forced to apologize for having let this rather obvious truth slip out. Nonetheless, most Japanese privately scoff at the kind of racial leveling which gets taken seriously in the United States. And very few of them bother to give it more than tongue-in-cheek notice.

When Honda opened a few assembly plants in the U.S. to help ease the American trade deficit, it deliberately located them in rural areas, where the fewest blacks lived, so as not to be accused of discriminatory hiring practices when it ended up with a mostly white work force (an accusation later proven in court). The Japanese knew, even from a distance, that blacks do not make good workers. This type of hardheaded realism, sadly lacking over here, typifies attitudes in Asia.

Another interesting -- and telling -- anecdote concerns what happened to all the babies born to Japanese prostitutes and black GIs after WWII: Japan simply shipped them all to Brazil. This is the type of act for which the world has long condemned Japan, and for which it has earned a xenophobic and racist reputation. But what is the end result? Japan now enjoys the world's most successful economy, and the lowest unemployment and crime rates.

One huge potential advantage for the Asians is that they don't consider eugenics a dirty word. If anyone dares mention it over here, all the usual idiots immediately bring up Hitler and genocide. But Asians simply view it as a commonsensical way to improve their genetic stock. In Singapore, Prime Minister Lee Kuan Yew has proposed a program to encourage college-educated (read: upper-class Chinese) women to reproduce, so their birthrate can catch up to that of the non-college-educated (read: Malay and lower-class Chinese) women. In mainland China, a program is already in place to prevent the retarded from reproducing. This is in stark contrast to the U.S., where the most prolific mothers are often the retardates of the inner-city ghettos.

Speaking of mainland China, it is only a question of time before it wriggles free of the Communist stranglehold which has choked its economy for the past four decades. And when it does, the Chinese people's essentially mercantile nature will inevitably take hold and create thousands of very affluent Chinese, as has happened wherever the Chinese have gone in their diaspora around the globe.

Another huge advantage most Asian countries enjoy is that they each have basically one ethnic group. True, in Japan, there are a few Koreans, and in Singapore, a sizeable native Malay population, but ethnic frictions are minor compared to those in this country.

As a result, these Asian countries maintain an ethic of team spirit and cooperation which is sorely lacking in the U.S. In Japan, and in the other Asian ethnic states, the sense of community is so strong that there is very little antisocial behavior. Loyalty, integrity and honesty are still expected -- and rewarded. Here, they are ideals to which lip service but little else is paid. To be sure, the Japanese will inevitably become a little soft and spoiled by their success, but their strong sense of community will prevent them from losing their values the way Americans have.

It is often said that Japanese are motivated by shame; Americans by guilt. What is left unsaid is that Japanese are motivated by shame to a much greater extent than Americans are motivated by guilt. (What could never be said is that in a country where many are motivated by (white) guilt, those who shamelessly exploit that guilt by demanding special privileges as professional victims will triumph at the expense of the guilt-ridden.) In any case, the sense of community and highly developed sense of shame over there prevent destructive behavior to an extent inconceivable in present-day America.

In order not to foster the impression that all of Asia is filled with go-getters, the point should be made here that quite a few of the Southeast Asians who come to the United States fare quite poorly. The Hmong and Meo tribesmen are a near-total loss on welfare. The Vietnamese, too, still have a long way to go.

Nazis of the 21st Century

The Japanese, currently the dominant group in Asia, tend to think in terms of inferiority and superiority. Social status being very structured within Japan, everyone always knows where he stands socially in relationship to everyone else. What is true of their internal culture is also true of the way the Japanese view the world, and their place in it. After WWII and their crushing defeat at the hands of the Allies, the entire country suffered from a vast inferiority complex. Western culture was accepted wholeheartedly, Westerners were looked up to, and the West became the image in which Japan tried to mold itself. With Japan's recent economic ascendancy, these attitudes are undergoing an abrupt change. Western culture, until recently revered over there, will eventually be as disdained as it was in earlier, more isolationist times. (Samurai movies will come back into vogue, and American films will fall into disfavor.)

Another factor reinforcing the Asians' new outlooks is that when they look westward, they will continue to see how well their Asian-American brethren are doing here (as well as how blacks and Hispanics pull the country down). What could offer better proof of superiority than, when competing in America with other races, they come out on top? The Japanese rebound in California is particularly telling: 45 years after their West Coast internment, they score the highest of any ethnic group on the SAT and have a higher percentage of high-school seniors academically eligible for admittance to the University of California at Berkeley than any other ethnic population group. If the Japanese were black, they would use their internment as an excuse for low SAT scores for the next 10 generations. If they were Jewish, they would use it forever to secure victim status.

Japanese Americans en route to internment camps during WWII.

Where are all these current trends heading? The “Nazis” of the 21st century will come from Asia. They will not take the same form, of course. There will be no Fourth Reich, no concentration camps, no swastikas. But the Asians will be justifiably proud of their new status as the economic leaders of the world, and will scoff (with good reason) at the once-proud but now humbled West. And, most importantly, they will have no qualms about examining the racial reasons for their success. The results of IQ tests will not be squelched. They will not waste taxpayers’ money on huge annual subsidies to the great-grandsons of Holocaust victims. Affirmative action will be but a quaint and long discarded notion. In fact, in the future, they will use the West as a case study of how not to handle race relations.

Editor’s Critique

If the Japs are so smart, why didn’t they win WWII? If the Japs are so smart, why have they perverted and cheapened their attractive “kimono” aesthetics by polluting it with the worst elements of American lifestyles? If the Japs are so smart, how is it that historically their CQ (creativity quotient) is as far below the white CQ as their IQ tops the white IQ?

Instauration claims that comparing white and Asian IQs is a non-starter. We say, compare Nordics with Japs, and then let the devil take the hindmost. But don’t compare whites, a category which in the U.S includes North Africans and Levantines (see U.S. Government racial designations, on page 23) with North Asians. The Filipinos, many who live in Zamboanga, where the monkeys have no tails, the Stone Age throwbacks in New Guinea, and the strung-out Thai opium-eaters are also Asians. What are their IQ scores?

In a letter sent after submitting his article, Asiaticus explained he had only used North Asians -- Koreans, Chinese and Japanese -- in his comparisons with whites, just as Instauration separates Nordics from other white races. But the average IQ score for the Nordic race is unobtainable -- that’s one of our biggest beefs -- so it’s impossible to prove Instauration’s contention that Nordics have IQs as high or higher than Asiaticus’s carefully selected Asians.

As for Japan’s future, we propose a scenario that differs radically from Asiaticus’s. Our bet is that, sooner or later, some new Chairman Mao, whose idol this time will be Genghis Khan instead of Karl Marx, will roll out a few nuclear-tipped ballistic missiles, point them at Japan and say, “Ah, so. We need 100 trillion yen a year in baksheesh -- or else.” And that will be the end of the Nipponese miracle.

No country is smart whose security depends on the military of a foreign nation. When Americans pull back from Japan and the Nips have to go it alone on their own, the Japanese Wirtschaftswunder will become much less wondrous.

Despite all these negative editorial comments, however, the author of “The New Master Race” has given us much food for thought. He is certainly on the right track when he makes race a central point of his argument, and his disquisition on the racial characteristics of blacks is smack on target.
THE NORDISH STATEMENT

I. Preamble: As members of the Nordish or Northern European race who love our race and care about its welfare and well-being, its freedom and independence, its physical and spiritual health, its children and future generations, and its continued existence and development, we are deeply concerned with the present racial situation and the effect of current trends on the existence of our race. We publish this statement of our position in the hope that it will provide a foundation for a moral and intellectual dialogue that will lead to a solution to the current crisis of Nordish existence, and turn the direction of trends and events away from Nordish extinction and toward Nordish freedom and independence, survival and salvation.

II. Statement of Racial Rights: We declare, claim, defend, affirm and recognize the following rights for all races:

All races have a right to be unique and different, to be themselves, and to love, value and be proud of what they are.

All races have a right to racial life, a right to live, a right to exist, and a right to the conditions they require for continued life and existence.

All races have a right to independence and self-determination, to racial freedom and liberty, to separate development, to exclusive control of their own life and existence, their own future and destiny, free from domination, control or interference by other races.

All races have a right to their own territory, to be secure in their own racial homeland, to have and hold their own country, separate from and exclusive of other races.

All races have a right to self-government, to their own sovereign and fully independent government to govern their own country, their own life and existence, and determine their own future.

All races have a right to the affections and loyalties, love and care of their members, and this right takes precedence over any ideology, or system of beliefs and values, that would promote disaffection or alienation of loyalties, or censure racial love and caring.

All races have a right to exclusive control over the creation, upbringing, development and education of their own children, to control over their own reproduction -- the renewal of their racial life -- free of interference by other races.

All races have a right to racial integrity, to racial separateness and exclusivity, to be free, safe and secure from the racially destructive effects of racial intermixture and replacement.

All races have a right to have their existence and identity recognized, respected and protected.

All races have a right to the material product of their own creation, and to use that product for their own benefit, free of any claim upon it by other races.

III. Statement of Principles: We believe that the end or purpose of government is to serve and preserve the race, to defend its separateness and independence, to serve its interests, especially its vital or life-essential interests, and preserve it from dilution, diminishment or extinction by intermixture with, or replacement by, other races. We believe that when a government becomes destructive of this end, or harmful to this purpose, when it becomes racially oppressive by denying the race its vital rights, the conditions of independence and separation required for its continued life, or when it threatens, endangers or violates the vital rights or interests of any race, its own race or another race, the members of the race have the right and the moral responsibility to work for the change of that government.

We believe that the end and purpose of a socially, culturally and politically dominant morality, philosophy, ideology or religion, or system of beliefs and values, is to serve and promote the welfare, well-being, health and best interests of the race, especially its vital or life-essential rights and interests, including its successful reproduction, and to act to preserve its existence. When a dominant morality, philosophy, ideology or religion becomes destructive or harmful to this end or purpose, or when it promotes the violation of the vital rights and interests of any race, its own race or another race, the members of the race have the right and the moral responsibility to work for the change of the dominant morality, philosophy, ideology or religion.

We believe the purpose of an international organization is to promote and protect the separation and independence of races and prevent the violation of the rights, independence or separateness of one race by another.

We believe no race should be a slave or servant to another, that all races are an end in themselves and not a means to the ends of others, that they should serve and benefit their own ends and not the ends of others, and that no race should interfere with or unduly influence the affairs or development of another.

We oppose, renounce and reject any and all doctrines or forms of racial supremacy or mastery, whereby one race is supreme or master over another, and rules over, governs, dominates or controls another, whether in whole or in part, totally or partially, overtly or covertly, by force or by guile.

We oppose, renounce and reject any and all forms of genocide or racial destruction or diminishment, whether with or without the cooperation or consent of its victims, whether inflicted by other races, self-inflicted, or a combination of both, including the following:

1. Any action, value system or condition which has a negative effect on the successful reproduction of a race, or lowers its birthrate below the replacement level or materially below the average of other races.

2. Any action, policy, value system or condition which denies a race the conditions it needs for its continued life or well-being, especially the condition of racial separation required for its successful reproduction free from the racially destructive effects of racial intermixture.

3. Any action, policy or process of racial dispossession, displacement or replacement whereby members of one race move into the established, recognized and well-settled territory or homeland of another race and gradually dispossess, displace and replace the original racial population.

4. Any action, policy, process or condition which is the result of human action and has the effect of lessening or diminishing the existence of the race, or altering, distorting or diluting its racial traits and characteristics, in the short term or the long term, in the existing generation or in the course of the generations to come.

5. Any action, policy, process, value system or condition which promotes, encourages or has the effect of increasing the racially destructive practice of racial intermixture.

6. Any action, policy, process, value system or condition which has the effect of taking persons away from their race, in mind or in body, physically or in alienation of affections or loyalties, and transferring them, or their affections and loyalties, to another race.
7. Any action, policy, process, value system or condition which opposes, resists or discourages racial preservation, or the continuation or renewal of racial life.
8. Any use of allegations of past wrongs to deny a race its present or future vital rights and interests, the conditions it needs to live and preserve its existence, especially its separation and independence from other races.

We oppose, renounce and reject any and all forms of totalitar-ianism or dictatorship, as contrary to the values and heritage of our race.

We support the democratic political institutions and legacy of individual rights, freedoms and protections that are part of the cultural tradition and civilization of our race, including freedom of speech, expression and inquiry, freedom of the press, freedom of association, and freedom of belief, creed, religion and conscience.

We support the moral principle of reciprocity as the basis of racial relations, recognizing the same rights for all races.

We oppose, renounce and reject all forms of invasion, migration or movement by members of one race into the established, recognized and well-settled territory, country or homeland of another.

We oppose, renounce and reject claims made for transfer of wealth from one race to another, or claims for material support made by one race of another, either as reparations for alleged past wrongs or for any other reason.

IV. Statement of Grievances: The Nordish race is undergoing a process of racial destruction which has already caused it great loss and diminishment and, if continued, will eventually result in its effective extinction or nonexistence. This process of Nordish racial destruction or racial death is caused by the presence of non-Nordish races within the Nordish homelands, denying the Nordish race the conditions of racial separation and independence it needs to exist.

The presence of non-Nordish races in the same territory as the Nordish race, either from the recent movement of non-Nordians into the Nordish homelands or from longer-standing non-Nordish populations within Nordish territory, has resulted in:

1. Racial intermixture that has caused many Nordians to be lost to their race, biologically or genetically, as they fail to racially reproduce themselves or create children of their own race or kind.
The amount of racial loss suffered by the Nordish race in the U.S.
by this cause each year is now greater than the amount of loss of Nordish life ever suffered by the U.S. in any one year of war.

2. A process of racial dispossession, displacement and replacement of the Nordish race by other races, caused by a combination of racial intermixture, non-Nordish immigration, a relatively low Nordish birthrate depressed below the replacement level (i.e., unsuccesful Nordish reproduction), and a relatively high non-Nordish birthrate.

The present governments of the Nordish race, and the currently dominant morality, philosophy, ideology, religion, or system of beliefs and values, have promoted, assisted, encouraged, advocated and endorsed the causes of the ongoing process of Nordish racial destruction, and continue to do so, from racial intermixture and the low Nordish birthrate, to non-Nordish immigration and Nordish racial dispossession, displacement and replacement.
They deny and oppose the vital, life-essential rights and interests of the Nordish race, its right to life and the conditions it needs to live, its separation and independence, freedom and self-determination, survival and salvation.

The situation is such that unless the dominant morality, philosophy, ideology, religion, or system of beliefs and values, and their prevailing influence on the governments of the Nordish race, are changed, so that they are supportive of the vital, life-essential rights and interests of the Nordish race rather than destructive of them, the Nordish race will suffer ever greater and more harmful losses to its racial body and spirit until it is effectively extinct and no longer exists.

V. Statement of Purpose: In order to secure the benefits of racial preservation and continued life for our race and posterity, for our own generation, our children's generation and the generations of our race yet to come, we intend to form and promote an organization dedicated to the survival, salvation, preservation and continued life of the Northern European or Nordish race, and the conditions of racial separation, freedom, independence and self-determination required for that purpose.

The membership of this organization shall consist solely of persons who are members of the Nordish race and subscribe in word and deed to the principles, goals and methods of this organiization as defined herein.

VI. Statement of Goals and Methods: Our goal is the salvation of our race. It is a supremely moral goal and deserves to be matched with equally moral methods. Salvation is continued life, and the continued life of our race requires its racial separation and independence. These are the conditions required for the continued existence of our race, and as such they are our goals.

The methods by which we will work for the separation and independence of our race from other races will be consistent with the high moral values and ethical traditions of our race and civilization. We renounce violence, vengeance, terror and intimidation, or the threats of same. As salvation, not revenge, is our goal, so moral and intellectual dialogue and enlightenment, not violence, is our method.

In our plan for separation, adequate provision will be made for a fully viable, separate and independent homeland for each racial group. The different peoples of North America, and the recent non-Nordish immigrants into Northern Europe, all had to relocate over great distances to their present locations. Their relocation to their own separate and independent racial homelands in North America, given the resources of the modern moving industry, should be relatively simple and comfortable by comparison.

Our hopes and efforts, prayers and actions are dedicated to the future of our race, to its best interests and what we believe to be the best interests of Creation as a whole. We will strive in all we do and aspire to do, and in the means by which we do it, to be worthy of Nordish posterity, and to leave it a legacy it can live with in peace and pride, both with the other races of humanity and, most of all, with its own moral conscience and self-image.

I don't consider this the indictment of a crime. I consider on charges of fraud and grand larceny.

USA Today (Mar. 21, 1990)
WHEN I SAID I was going to Scandinavia, everyone said, “Oh, be sure and see the mermaid!” “The ski jumps!” “The fish market!” Well, these weren’t the reasons I wanted to go. I wanted to see Nordics in their natural state, blue eyes and all, and get away from the American pop culture for a couple of weeks.

Our Stockholm guide announced that 80% of Swedes have blue eyes. Exclamations arose at this revelation, as though it were some kind of news. What the guide didn’t tell us, and probably didn’t know, was that 80% of Norwegians and Danes also have blue eyes, as do perhaps 60% of old-stock Americans, whose ancestors came from these predominantly Nordic lands. They say 60% of the people in Milan once had blue eyes, reminding us that Germanics from English, Australians from Americans, Canadians from Danes and Danes from Swedes.

One of my trip mates thought Germans could be spotted by their aggressiveness at the smorgasbord. I questioned this, since I myself, a non-German, left the board more than once with the look -- and paunch -- of a Viking who had just completed a successful raid.

All in all, I felt wonderfully comfortable among all these Nordic folk and took much pleasure in observing them and admiring their handsome children with their bright hair and rosy-red cheeks. At the same time, I felt saddened to reflect, as Madison Grant reflected so long ago, that this extraordinary race, so confident and masterful, appears to be passing away.

One would think the Scandinavians, of all people, would be those most eager to perceive the dangers threatening them and their kind, and would work to safeguard the future of the race which they themselves so beautifully exemplify in its time of peril. But they seem to be most uneager. No amount of economic “integration,” socialism or other gimmicks can save them as long as they remain indifferent to their ethnic integrity and ignore their profound cultural and racial relationships with other parts of Nordic Europe.

But how could they be so wise? All of them, like us, have gone astray, to paraphrase Isaiah. They have the New World model to corrupt their tastes and distort their true culture. Someone once said: “Tell me the kind of music a people listens to and I’ll tell you everything there is to know about that people.” Well, Northerners now get music from New York and television from Hollywood. This tells all there is to know about them -- and us. Unfortunately, American pop culture rules the lands of the Vikings.

On a Norwegian tour bus in Denmark, with Norwegian driver and tape-deck, we (mostly Americans) were regaled with Frankie Laine, Barbra Streisand, Frank Sinatra and Perry Como. The impresario probably thought this cacophony was somehow ideal for a fjord adventure. I tried to drown out the inappropriate and inane sounds by humming Solveig’s Song, but there was no escape. After the “concert” one of our passengers called out, “Do you have any Victor Borge?” This trendy Long Island tourist’s ancestors, we may suppose, dwelled elsewhere than in Scandinavia, as did the ancestors of his favorite “Danish” comedian.

Not just Norwegians and Danes, who were combatants, but also neutral Swedes seemed obsessed with what they call “The Resistance” -- the underground skirmishes with the Germans from 1940 to 1945. In Oslo, our guide seemed more concerned with the anti-Nazi “resistance” than with the future of Norway and Europe. In Stockholm, our (Jewish) guide spoke endlessly about Raoul Wallenberg, but said little about Gustavus Adolphus.

In Lillehammer, a young Norwegian brought up the immigration question, an issue near the forefront of political discussion in Norway now, as in Sweden and Denmark. He didn’t volunteer too many of his own opinions, giving the impression it was too hot a topic on which to speak freely. He did assert, however, that Norwegians who dare oppose welcoming Turks, Mongols or Muslims from distant continents are called racists.
I saw something of this racism issue in Oslo on a Sunday morning as I strolled along Karl Johans Gate. On the steps of the university, a group of young singers was gathered. Their chorale was not Bach or Buxtehude, but something more modern, still moving, though -- almost German, I thought -- and perhaps worth listening to. The words were neither German nor Norwegian, but English. They were proclaiming lustily "the coming of a better day."

A young father with a small child stood nearby. I asked what the occasion was.

"They're Norwegians. They're demonstrating against apartheid in South Africa."
"You mean they're supporting the blacks against the whites?"
"No, they're against apartheid."
"But most of the whites in South Africa are for apartheid."
"Yes."
"And most of the blacks are against apartheid."
"Yes."
"Then they're supporting blacks against whites."
"Yes."

Later, near the palace, some young people, many of them distinctly non-Norwegian in appearance, were handing out pamphlets. I accepted one and asked what it was all about. The demonstrator said he and his friends were against "russism." I asked if he meant they were against Russia. "Oh, no," he said, "against russism." From the look of him, I knew he was sounding off against "racism," and that nothing would make him happier than to bring all of Pakistan, and perhaps Zimbabwe, too, to the Oslo Fjord.

But this mindless solicitude about nonwhites halfway around the world doesn't stop there. As Scandinavians in times past were immigrants themselves in the hundreds of thousands to North America, today new immigrants pour into the ancient Nordic broodlands, mainly from Asia and Africa, many of them with complexions, dress, features and behavior that would have made them distinctly non-Norwegian in appearance, were handing out pamphlets. I accepted one and asked what it was all about. The demonstrator said he and his friends were against "racism." I asked if he meant they were against Russia. "Oh, no," he said, "against russism." From the look of him, I knew he was sounding off against "racism," and that nothing would make him happier than to bring all of Pakistan, and perhaps Zimbabwe, too, to the Oslo Fjord.

But this mindless solicitude about nonwhites halfway around the world doesn't stop there. As Scandinavians in times past were immigrants themselves in the hundreds of thousands to North America, today new immigrants pour into the ancient Nordic broodlands, mainly from Asia and Africa, many of them with complexions, dress, features and behavior that would have made Olaf Trygvason or Gustavus Adolphus wince.

Hell hath no fury like Jews facing Vereinigung

SCORNING THE NEW GERMANY

When the Berlin Wall tumbled last November 9, most of the world rejoiced. Jews, however, were far from pleased. Dr. Tsvi Nussbaum of Rockland County (NY), who claims he is not a Jewish doctor in England, was the "Warsaw ghetto boy" in that endlessly reprinted war photo, told the New York Post (Feb. 20): "I wish they would rebuild the Wall, and build it stronger and taller." Nussbaum was convinced that when Germans reunite, "they will want to be the world power." A.M. Rosenthal, a Jew with much more clout, has been giving over to Jewish activism. He wears a beeper, like a doctor, in his effusion of February 8, he wrote nervously of "a future in which a united Germany is the most powerful nation on earth." William Pfaff, a non-Jewish columnist for the Los Angeles Times, called the assertion nonsense, noting that Germany, East or West, is not even a member of the nuclear club.

"I don't think any Jew living here was happy when the Wall opened." The speaker: "Menachem," an economics student. The place: not Jerusalem, but West Berlin. Washington Jewish Week sent one of its reporters last winter to find out what young German Jews are thinking these days. Came the answer (Jan. 25): dark, gloomy thoughts. Not at all unusual was the case of Ofer Frydling, chairman of the Berlin Union of Jewish Students: "Ofer's life is given over to Jewish activism. He wears a beeper, like a doctor, in case he is needed for a Jewish emergency." A "pogrom beeper," perhaps? But these young Jews hardly knew what an anti-Semite was! Reuven Gambit was raised by Jewish parents with no interest in their roots, yet he plans to move to Israel to join the army, and then proceed to New York City to become an artist. "Germany is dead," he explained. "Dead and damned." But, as Ofer Frydling observes, though 95% of German Jews talk about leaving, 95% stay.

Elie Wiesel came to Washington (DC) in early February to address a meeting of Holocaustniks. He lamented that the November 9 opening of the Wall fell on the 51st anniversary of Kristallnacht. Preceding Wiesel on the podium was Roman Kent, a fellow who looked most unlike his name. He insisted that German reunification "must never happen," but was fearful that it might. So many Nazi criminals were living it up all over the world! Just last October, Henry Kissinger painstakingly and somewhat solecistically laid out his personal timetable for German reunification in the Los Angeles Times: "The final stage -- towards the latter part of the 1990s -- would be free elections in East Germany, after which that territory would be under a regime along the Austrian model, perhaps in loose federation with West Germany." Nice try, Henry!

On December 17, Gregor Gysi, the Jewish Communist leader of East Germany, warned that "Gross Deutschland [his pet Nazi-fied term for a reunited Germany] would be a victory for the right and drive the left to the fringes of society." In mid-February, Gysi was still at it, appealing through an Israeli rabbi to world Jewry for massive emergency aid to East Germany, imploring Jews to do whatever they could to prevent the two Germanys from getting together again. "This is pretty strange stuff," said one U.S. official of Gysi's request to Rabbi Zvi Weinmann for $15 billion.

Strange or not, the Washington Times made Gysi's pleas its lead story on February 21. The article quoted an unnamed senior Israeli official as saying, "Ironically, the new regimes in Eastern Europe appear to still believe in the Protocols of Zion and show that by appealing to Jews for help." Not only Gysi, but leaders throughout Eastern Europe have been buttonholing Jewish elders as if they held the keys to the kingdom. (Well, didn't the late Nicolae Ceausescu call America a "Jewish dictatorship"?)

As recently as August 13, 1986, the East German regime celebrated the 25th anniversary of the Berlin Wall with parades and a special postage stamp. Today, it is clear that hardly any Germans on either side loved the Wall, while a good many Jews on both sides were ready to plant wet kisses on it.

Foreign Minister Moshe Arens was the first Israeli official to cautiously embrace German reunification. When editorialists accused him of encouraging a "Fourth Reich," Arens quickly explained, "If I wasn't foreign minister today, my feet wouldn't touch German soil." (New York Post, Feb. 20)

The attitude of today's Jews toward Germany is best illustrated in Peter Sichrovsky's extraordinary book, Strangers in Their Own Land, a series of interviews with young Jews living in Germany and Austria. One successful young Jewish lawyer told Sichrovsky:

I have an inexplicable sympathy for German criminals. I've never been analyzed, but I'm sure a psychiatrist would have a field day with me. What I like best of all is defending real criminals, all those thieves, murderers, swindlers, the worse the better. I like these types and their perversions. The nastier the better. Everything that does not spell decent German I find appealing, and I'd do anything in my power to defend these types. I certainly don't lack clients...

My wife is a lawyer. She's also Jewish. Though her parents emigrated to the United States way back, she returned....

Jewish shrinks routinely explain this sort of affinity as a consequence of the Holocaust, yet shrysts like Sichrovsky flourished in Weimar Germany. One book about the Viennese underworld, published when Hitler was only a brown spot on the horizon, described the many Hebrew and Yiddish words in that city's hoary criminal argot.

Without a doubt, most Jews would still love to establish a network of Marxist commissars over Germany. Some say it in almost so many words:

- Michael Lerner edits Tikkun, an influential liberal Jewish magazine. In a recent guest column in USA Today, Lerner suggested that, to help overcome their "rigid character structures," "every" German should be "required" to "learn how the Christian churches, the universities, the industrialists and German intellectuals accommodated and encouraged the growth of anti-Semitism and virulent nationalism." Every citizen of Germany, said Lerner, should serve two years in a German-sponsored international peace corps with two purposes: to teach other countries about the dangers of anti-Semitism, racism and xenophobic nationalism and to provide material assistance to the peoples of Eastern Europe and the Middle East whose problems are at least partially a product of the carnage Germany inflicted.

- Columnist William Safire bemoaned the German "character flaw" which makes them, unlike Americans, self-satisfied. As a solution, Safire proposed making Germany a "transparent" nation, with "a vast bureaucracy" of politicians and reporters from other countries snooping about. (New York Times, Feb. 23)

A.M. Rosenthal used words much like Safire's in his own New York Times column (Feb. 15), which recommended harsh measures for keeping Germans in check:

Such as mandating specific machinery in the new German government empowered to combat signs of resurgent racism or political irredentism in politics, journalism, education or any other part of German society.

Such as an international body created and encouraged by Germans to poke around the country, looking for those signs and shouting unpleasantly when discovering them.

Such as regular meetings... among Germans, victims and former enemies, to discuss such currently unfashionable (!!) topics as Nazis and the Holocaust.

Returning to the Lerner proposal, try to imagine a Russian or German insisting that "every Jew" should "learn how the synagogues, the yeshivas, the Jewish merchants and intellectuals accommodated and encouraged the growth of Soviet Bolshevism." It's hard to conceive of such a demand -- for the simple reason that few Russians and Germans have the makings of commissars in them. They just don't have that "character flaw" -- as William Safire might notice one day, if he ever stops criticizing the flaws of others.
A QUEER IN THE WOODPILE

The editor of Instauration is bombarded with all kinds of letters -- friendly, hostile, clever, dumb, constructive, destructive. Some communications make him feel he is on the right wavelength; others make him want to pack it all in and retreat to a hut in Baffinland.

One letter he received some months ago was a veritable knockout pill -- so all-out disequilibrating that he put off publishing it month after month, issue after issue. Despite its shocking confession, the letter was so literate and so smoothly written that it almost cried out not to be crumpled and tossed in the wastebasket -- the fate most of its readers would say it deserved.

At any rate, since most Instaurationists want to know what gives and have the right to know what gives, and since Instaurationists, having taken so many blows over time, are certainly resilient enough to take one more, the following letter is printed in its entirety, with only minimal editing and one rude interruption.

Dear Editor:

Many of your readers will be shocked to learn that there are homosexuals in the ranks of Instaurationists. I can assure you that the two are not mutually exclusive, as I am a member of both groups.

My sexual orientation has never blinded me to the fact that Western civilization and the white race in general are in deep and possibly fatal decline. Although I am not an activist, I have read widely and observed carefully for the past 15 years, and am more pessimistic than ever about our future.

"But you are part of the problem," many of your readers will say. Although it's true that I have not reproduced (and many will think that is a good thing), I have also never joined the ranks of organized faggotry, a movement whose ranks include the most fanatical enemies of Instauration. The militant homosexuals' "We're mad as hell" attitude is a reaction to many years of perceived brutality and discrimination. I have waited in vain for white rights activists to develop this same attitude and organize in a similar way.

There is a solidarity and acceptance within the homosexual community, even among the non-militant sectors, that would make Instaurationists weep with envy if they were aware of it. I know of no such comparable esprit de corps in white activist circles. Walk into any homosexual bar, nightclub or restaurant and there is an immediate feeling of acceptance. Even on your first visit, you are not eyed with suspicion, as are strangers at almost every rightist gathering. My experience in homosexual hangouts is limited, but I have never been accosted, propositioned or harassed in any way. These are very civil places [Editor's note: What about those bathhouses?] where one is accepted as a "brother" unless and until he proves himself unworthy of the designation.

I find it ironic that white preservationists now hold the place once occupied by homosexuals, that of the most universally despised group on the face of the earth. No creed is today more often and more severely condemned by every "moral authority," from the White House to the media to the church pulpit, than white "racism." Even homosexuals are treated with more compassion and respect by all but the most fanatical Bible thumpers. When they preach against homosexuality, Falwell and others of his stripe continually stress that they are not condemning the individual, but the "sin." When denouncing white activists, the establishmentarians make no such disclaimer.

Whatever you have been led to believe, a homosexual has little or no choice about his sexual identity. While homosexuality may not be a genetic condition, members of the third sex are shaped by forces beyond their control. In my own case, reviewing my childhood and adolescence, I can see some of these forces at work. Contrary to what comes across on movie and TV screens, however, knowledge alone is not sufficient to deprogram one who has been so conditioned. (I was not seduced by a homosexual or physically abused by my parents or other adults. We are not all, or even most of us, pedophiles, or interested in "recruiting" young boys.)

Homosexuals would shun me if they knew that I am an Instaurationist. Instaurationists would disown me if they knew of my homosexuality. I am lonely, very tired, full of despair on all counts. Believe me, there is nothing "gay" about being homosexual, even in a society which is making that status more and more respectable every day.

The People's Choice

Pollsters recently asked Britons this question: "If people want to, should they be given financial aid to help them return to their country of origin?" The Sun printed the results (Oct. 9, 1989):

Among Negro women, 75% said, "Yes, offer us money to go home." A black welder in Bristol expressed the thoughts of many: "I would go back to Jamaica tomorrow if I could afford it. This is not my real home. And I know there are hundreds of Jamaicans who feel the same."
Shoah Business

The 1990s promise to be the Decade of the Holocaust. Exterminationist Studies are being added to the core curriculum of schools across the country. Institutions of higher learning [sic] are recruiting specialists in the Holocaust for their faculties. The U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum in Washington (DC) is abuilding.

Hollywood is doing its part to goose the people’s consciousness. Four major films dealing with Nazi atrocities have been released in recent months:

Triumph of the Spirit was actually filmed at Auschwitz-Birkenau. Salamo Arouch (played by Willem Dafoe, a renegade Nordic who specializes in playing Jews) is a Greek Hebe who somehow gets to be middleweight boxing champ. After he and his family are deported from Thessalonika to gas oven country, Arouch literally has to fight to stay alive. SS officers place huge bets on the outcome of boxing matches that pit him against all comers. The winner gets extra rations. You can guess what happens to the losers. Need it be added that the pit him against all comers. The winner gets extra rations. You can guess what happens to the losers. Need it be added that the movie’s title is intended as a takeoff on Leni Riefenstahl’s Triumph of the Will?

Music Box stars a trumping Jessica Lange, playing a lawyer who defends her Hungarian-born father against charges of war crimes. The film is directed by Constantin Costa-Gavras, who has made a career of turning out anti-right and anti-white potboilers. This time, the bigoted director’s target is John Demjanjuk, the Cleveland auto worker who was framed and deported to Israel, where he was sentenced to death by three vengeful judges after the prosecution claimed -- but did not prove -- that he was “Ivan the Terrible,” the mass murderer of Treblinka. East German actor Amin Mueller-Stahl portrays Mike Laszlo, a retired ironworker who emigrated to Chicago after WWII, who is firmly identified as a vicious killer when a music box shows up containing eight photographs of Mike and his pals in their younger days merrily raping and killing hapless Jews.

Enemies -- A Love Story. A Polish Jew (Ron Silver) moved to Coney Island after the war with his Catholic-converted-to-Judaism second wife (Margaret Stein). She had hidden him during the Nazi occupation, while his first wife and their children were supposedly Holocausted. In New York, Silver becomes a successful ghost-writer and engages in a torrid affair with an Auschwitz survivor (Lena Olin). Later on, he runs into his first wife (Angelica Huston), who also emigrated to greater New York, having crawled away from under a heap of bodies -- which included their children -- and survived years in a Soviet labor camp. What’s the poor Jew to do? His second wife is devoted to him. His sexy mistress is pregnant and wants to marry him. Then his first wife turns up alive! It isn’t hard to understand why the critics have been giving this movie four stars.

The Rose Garden stars Swedess Liv Ullmann (who when not acting is plugging for the admission of more Asian refugees into Western Europe), Maximillian Schell and Peter Fonda. The film relates the tearjerking tale of the survivor of a wartime massacre of Jewish children who finally gets to confront one of his Nazi tormentors.

The year 1990 is certainly off to a great start in Hollywood.

“X” Marks the Holiday?

February 21 marked the 25th anniversary of the assassination of Negro activist Malcolm X. Memorial services were held across the country. A new group, the National Malcolm X Commemoration Commission, has proclaimed 1990 as “the Year of Malcolm X,” and hopes to make his birthday, May 19, a national holiday. The campaign already enjoys the support of Rep. John Conyers (D-MI), Jesse Jackson and Dick Gregory, among others.

Born Malcolm Little in Omaha in 1925, and he and his family moved to Lansing where, after his father’s death in a railroad accident, his mother ended up in a mental institution and her eight children became wards of the state.

Malcolm’s first arrest was in Boston in 1945 on a theft charge. While serving time at Concord State prison, he joined Elijah Muhammad’s Chicago-based Nation of Islam. Following his release in 1952, he became minister of the Detroit mosque and, eventually, the Black Muslims’ national spokesman.

A fiery orator, he drew huge crowds of adoring Negroes with his message that white people were “devils in human form” and with his calls for black separation.

In 1964, he split with the Nation of Islam and founded his own Organization of Afro-American Unity. He sought to link the Negro civil rights movement in America with anti-white movements in other parts of the world. Viewed as a dangerous rival by Elijah Muhammad and Louis Farrakhan, Malcolm was gunned down by three members of the Nation of Islam while he was speaking at the Audubon Ballroom in Harlem.

Young American blacks have recently “rediscovered” Malcolm X. His slogan, “By Any Means Necessary,” embrazos T-shirts that picture “Him” standing in a window brandishing a gun.

Rap bands, such as Public Enemy, KRS1 and Boogie Down Productions, include quotations from Malcolm X in their lyrics. Spike Lee’s movie, Do the Right Thing, highlights X’s argument that violence should be used in ‘self-defense.’ To date, the film has grossed $28 million.

Books by and about Malcolm X are becoming bestsellers. B. Dalton’s, the 800-store chain, featured a full page of Malcolm X books in its 16-page Black History Month promotional brochure.

It’s hard to say where all this will lead, except to note that the more blacks are radicalized by such as Malcolm X, the more whites will maintain a healthy distance.

A Catholic Lady’s Lament

Don’t be too hard on the Christians. I was raised a Catholic and feel that my strict, value-oriented education helped me a great deal. I never got the impression that Christ was a wimp. Au contraire! He chased the money-changers (inside traders) out of the temple. And He was right in doing so, the nuns told me.

When I was in the fifth grade, Father H. had a special sermon for the children’s Mass. He explained in simple terms that black people and white people are very different. He said we should look at blacks and see if we found them attractive. Chances are, we wouldn’t. God meant them not to be good-looking so we wouldn’t marry them. We were white, and should date and marry people of our own race.

Our beloved priest explained we did not mate with donkeys because God made them sexually unattractive to us. Since every bird mated only with its own kind, people should do the same.

That sermon stayed with me, even through my liberal days. I always thought of it when I looked at blacks. It made so much sense -- they are unattractive to me and to most whites. Unfortunately, they are often unattractive to each other despite their ‘black is beautiful’ cry.

Father H. also taught us that Negroes aren’t as smart as white people. They can’t help it; that’s the way they are. If we married them, he said, our children had a good chance of being stupid. The nuns consistently reinforced the father’s teachings through my 13 years of Catholic schooling.
We were told to be kind to all people, whatever their race, but not to have them for friends or spouses. Can you imagine getting away with this now?

I feel the nuns and priests who were my teachers would have felt quite at home with those early age. Now, all three of my children are avid Instaurationists and are educating their children to be proud, not ashamed, of who they are.

Michiganders Fight Racism

Michigan's Civil Rights Division has issued a ukase that calls on the state's colleges and universities to develop "zero tolerance" policies for combating racist attitudes.

The Commission report, "Civil Rights In Higher Education in Michigan," recommends that public and private institutions require all students to take courses in cultural pluralism and that matching sensitivity training be provided for all members of the college community, from trustees to professors. Training should "heighten awareness" of the concerns of racial and ethnic minorities, women, the mentally infirm and physically disabled, and, of course, homos.

The University of Michigan, which is paranoid about racism, began its second semester with a week-long series of vigils, symposiums and lectures that involved nearly every school and department. "Ancient Greece and the Black Experience" was presented by the classical studies department. Nuclear Engineering sponsored "Your Success Can Be Enhanced by Positive Race Relations." The School of Natural Resources had a go at "Environmental Issues and Concerns: The Impact on People of Color."

On Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday, a thousand students, teachers and staff took part in a sensitivity session that involved each participant pairing with someone of a different racial or ethnic group, watching the controversial Spike Lee film, Do the Right Thing, and then sharing his or her reaction.

Last year, the faculty of the College of Literature, Science and Arts narrowly defeated a proposal to make a course on race and ethnicity a graduation requirement. A university-wide code forbidding harassment and discrimination among students was struck down after a white graduate student sued in Federal Court on the ground that it abridged free speech.

U. of Michigan President James Duderstadt and his staff remain unshaken in their devotion to minority-mongering. As Duderstadt recently remarked, "The challenge is one of pluralism. We're reinventing the university for 21st-century America."

A Bastion on Every Block

Architecture is largely determined by lifestyle. Medieval European architecture featured the walled city, moat and castle because everyday life was dangerous. For much the same defensive reason, Hispanic and Arab residential architecture has always featured the courtyard style, where domestic life looks inward to the protected garden.

In the U.S., street crime has spawned the limited-access apartment complex, replete with armed guards, TV monitors and plastic access cards for entry to underground garages. At first, the liberal press berated the occupants for their elitist fears, until ghetto types grew adept at decoding the electronic locks and dodging the snooping cameras, occasionally by enlisting the aid of custodians and cleaning women.

By the mid-1980s, demand for the urban strongholds had flattened. The in thing now was the "condo canyon" developments on distant suburban beltways and superhighways.

A more forbidden form of modern bastion protects us "ins" from them "outs." The reference is to federal prisons, 22% of whose inmates are now aliens. In addition to the 70 federal jails, there are 308 halfway houses, 39 juvenile facilities and, of course, the vastly larger archipelago of state prisons. It adds up to a lot of protection. But not enough, not nearly enough.

Dimming Halos

Jewish saints have the most devilish rūmēs. Take Albert "Bombfather" Einstein, who had to hire a mathematician, Hermann Minkowski, to put his equations into some kind of comprehensible form. Al, it turns out, relied pretty heavily on the work of his physicist wife, Mileva Maric, for his scientific breakthroughs -- work which he never acknowledged publicly, but whose importance can now be readily ascertained from letters to and from his wife.

The correspondence, thoroughly analyzed by historian Senta Troemel-Ploetz, appears in her biography of Einstein, not translated into English, which is now in its fourth printing in West Germany. Einstein, however, did admit to feeling sorry that, after wifey had finished all the housework, she had to burn the midnight oil doing his math for him (this is before he hired Minkowski).

Mr. E=mc² walked away from Maric, a non-Jewish Serb, in 1914, leaving her with a psychotic son and a daughter. (Their first child was an illegitimate baby girl who was presumably farmed out for adoption.) Maric died in poverty in 1937. By then, Einstein, loaded with fame and quite well off financially, had remarried, this time within the fold.

In 1896, Al and Mileva both took their entrance exams at the Swiss Federal Institute of Technology. She passed, he failed. But in the end, Al, not Mileva, graduated. During a 1905 visit to Maric's father, shortly before her husband published his Special Theory of Relativity, she said, "A short while ago we finished a very important work, which will make my husband world famous." Until recently, very few Einstein worshippers had heard about the "we."

As for Sigmund Freud, his sainthood has been under attack for some time. Nevertheless, he is still considered in some quarters, particularly in Jewish quarters, one of the great gurus of the 20th century. Although the reading public has been sketchily informed of his sexual obsessions, his dope addiction and his anti-Nazism, not until the publication of a new biography, Freud, Biologist of the Mind, by Frank Sulloway of MIT, have some of the more sordid tricks he played upon his patients become known, such as persuading two occupants of his couch, one of whom he diagnosed as a latent homosexual, to divorce their respective mates and marry each other. In another case, Freud claimed he had made a brilliant cure of a neurotic Jewess, who nevertheless ended up in an asylum. Still another, Freud's treatment of a 16-year-old girl named Dora for hysteria, which helped make the Herr Doktor a world class shaman, is also believed to have been rigged.

Despite Freud's psychoanalytic babble, all she probably had was a cough.

The reputation of that other Jewish triumph of modern thought, super-guru Karl Marx, has also been taking a nosedive, as the suffering people of Eastern Europe go about ridding themselves of the Semitic claptrap known as communism.
Ethnic Punch Up

Steve Whalen, the author of Saint Brooklyn (Arlington House, 1989), is a fourth generation Irish American, a Brooklyn fireman who writes of the grinding hostility of the “Harps” for the “Guineas” (Italian Americans) and vice versa. Although both population groups are Catholic, the Italians deeply resent the Irish domination of their church.

The novel has a Romeo and Juliet subplot, in which the elder brother of the Irish protagonist reveals his love for an Italian girl, much to the shock and horror of his family. When the couple cannot be persuaded to break it off, fierce quarreling ensues as to whether the wedding should be held in an Irish or an Italian church.

Because he is paying the bills, the Italian father of the bride insists on adding a slew of Italianate flourishes to the ceremony, which enrages the groom’s relations. The argument soon degenerates into a violent punch up between the two families.

Eternal Selma

In 1965, “integration” was as dirty a word for white Alabamans as “segregation” was for most blacks. Whites, led by Gov. George Wallace, accused blacks and blacks, led by Martin Luther King Jr., of Dr. Norward Roussell, Selma’s first black school board refused to extend the contract for allegedly working to convert Selma’s all-white private academies.

Selma has been in a nonstop racial uproar. It all began when the six whites on the school board refused to extend the contract of Dr. Norward Roussell, Selma’s first black superintendent, and the five black board members walked out in protest. Most of the problem devolved from Roussell’s cutting back on Selma’s academic “tracking system,” which caused Level One to be 90% white and Level Three 90% black. Roussell and his supporters contend that the practice is “segregationist.”

The black response to Roussell’s dismissal has been several months of often violent protest -- 24-hour sit-ins at City Hall, constant shouting and shouting at school board meetings, steady harassment of white students in classes, and the like. The white half of Selma’s population has responded with the charge that the town’s black leaders are trying to “resegregate” the public schools by creating an atmosphere of intimidation. If that is the blacks’ intention, they are succeeding admirably, as hundreds of white students have begun heading for Selma’s all-white private academies.

The eyes of the world focused briefly on Selma in March, when the historic 1965 civil rights march to Montgomery was re-staged. Few of the TV viewers realized that Selma today is every bit as racially polarized as it ever was.

A recent development in Selma’s racial clash has been the founding of a white group called PEST, to challenge the black group BEST, which has led the demonstrations. Each of these racially homogeneous outfits labels the other “the real Communists.” BEST was recently sued by the city Board of Education for $10 billion (not million) for maintaining a tracking system which allegedly keeps incipient black Einsteins out of college. Blacks are also circulating petitions to force a recall election of Mayor Joe Smitherman, the same white ex-segregationist who generated his city’s anti-black forces in that long-ago spring of 1965, which to many Selma residents seems like almost yesterday.

Report Card

I have taught in public schools, most of which resemble a cross between a halfway house and a revolving insurrection. I have also taught in all-black and all-male private high schools. I have encountered hundreds of beautiful and healthy young people, self-disciplined, hard-working, respectful and intelligent, most of them in my private school classes. Of all the ethnic groups I have taught here in western New York State, the Polish students are most representative of what used to be known as “American.”

When one of my classes averages 90 on a Regents chemistry exam, I have a hard time believing that the Northern and Eastern European type is getting dumber by the year. Lower and lower SAT scores don’t bear this out. A major cause is the increasing numbers of nonwhites taking the test.

When I was a youngster, things were different. In the public school I attended, my math, physics, chemistry and English teachers were all Ph.D.s. A private school wasn’t needed in our city either academically or to provide physical safety. Schools reflect the community. Ours demanded teachers who knew their stuff and administrators who were not afraid to expel troublemakers.

The belief that all children were beautiful and gifted had not become an article of faith. “Honors” students were just a handful out of a hundred -- not one-third of the class, as today. A good swat on the behind was not child abuse, nor was standing motionless and silent in the corner considered a cruel and unusual punishment. Mothers stayed home and saw to it that their children were civilized before they entered the first grade. School discipline didn’t require lawyers or social workers.

The punishment for repeated goofing off was being sent to the dean, who ordered the student to “assume the position.” His pine paddle sent an indelible and unforgettable message. If it was not received, the last step was to the principal, known at our school as “Foot,” which he applied vigorously, both figuratively and literally. Some misfits were never seen at school again.

More than 10 years ago, I predicted that the “computer solution” was another pie-in-the-sky placebo. Courses in computer science were originally intended to teach logic but soon degenerated into game playing and word processing. Today, most computer courses are glorified typing classes. But that’s merely an adaptation to reality, since most public education today resembles an effort to teach penguins how to fly. As Boss Penguin keeps insisting, “A wing is a terrible thing to waste.”

My grandfather used to say that we should all have our IQs tattooed on our foreheads. He felt it would eliminate a lot of wasted verbal intercourse.

The enduring strength of the American Majority lies in its biological foundation, which I regard as basically unaltered. Most of today’s white youth are attuned to an alien psychological and spiritual environment that is out of step with their own biology. My classroom experience convinces me that the Majority still has a sound base. Our enemies recognize this and proceed cautiously to avoid the sort of calamity that would provide the impetus for our instauration.

Blackmail at Gunpoint?

In March, Milwaukee city alderman Michael McGee called on black males from 14 to 70 to form an armed militia if white taxpayers don’t cough up more billions of dollars to “solve” the mounting problems of Negroes. At a press conference dealing with "The State of the Inner City," the former Black Panther gunslinger threatened a renewal of urban guerrilla warfare of the sort that made for the "long, hot summers" of the 1960s. Boasted McGee, "They [blacks] can fight and they already know how to shoot. I'm going to give them a cause to die for."

Other black community leaders, while hesitating publicly to support McGee's appeal for organized violence, slavishly agree that whites are to blame for everything from the soaring rates of black teenage pregnancy, unemployment, drug addiction and homicide to the overwhelmingly disproportionate number of Negro prison inmates.

McGee has already enlisted his three sons as the first soldiers of his black urban army: "I plan that by the year 2000 things will have changed, or we're going to be fighting."

Rift Healers

Not content to pull strings, Jewish Democrats have formed a racist caucus within the party to ensure that it takes stands favorable to Jewish interests. The Jewish Democratic Study Group is a direct outgrowth of the National Jewish Leadership Council, which played a key, though largely unheralded, role in Gov. Dukakis's lamentably unsuccessful 1988 presidential campaign.

Headed by Morton Mandel, a former president of the Council of Jewish Federations, the Study Group's top brass includes Hyman Bookbinder, who has served as Washington rep of the American Jewish Committee. Bookbinder is confident the new group can see to it that the Democrats reinforce their position on such nitty-gritty issues as anti-Semitism.

High on the legislative agenda for Jews is the proposed Civil Rights Act of 1990, designed to overturn the 1989 Supreme Court decisions that made it more difficult, but not too difficult, for employees to bring discrimination and affirmative action suits.

The bill has won the wholehearted endorsement of the American Jewish Committee, the American Jewish Congress, the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, the National Council of Jewish Women and the National Federation of Temple Sisterhoods.

At a press conference where leading Jews joined the NAACP in backing the 1990 Civil Rights legislation push, Albert Vorspan of the Union of Hebrew Congregations, representing some 1.2 million Reform Jews, reminded reporters, "Despite all the irritations and even real issues which sometimes divide [Jews and blacks], we still have a deep, shared agenda."

Matzo Monopoly

Three weeks before Passover, B. Manischewitz, America's biggest matzo maker, was indicted for conspiring to fix the wholesale price of the company's principal product. The charge was filed by the U.S. Justice Department in Newark (NJ) Federal Court. If convicted, Manischewitz, which denies any wrongdoing, may face a penalty of $1 million.

Among the scads of Jews who came to the firm's defense was Allan Gale of Detroit's Jewish Community Council, who told reporters that he has found no evidence whatsoever of price manipulation. On the contrary, he pointed out that supermarket chains actually subsidize the price of Passover matzos. What he left unsaid is that stores afford this Kosher subsidy by passing the extra costs along to their non-Jewish customers.

No Ball and Chain

Joan Braden's long-in-coming book (about three years), Just Enough Rope: An Intimate Memoir, didn't give her any rope at all to hang herself. The myriad of publishers who turned her ms. down before it was finally accepted by Villard, not exactly a household name in the publishing business, were right on target. Reviewer Susan Dooley, who does a woman's-libber job on Joanie, says she is a "pretty woman" whose photo does not display her abundance of "charm." Got that right, too. The picture accompanying the review makes her look like a wimp-simp schoolmarm. She also has an uncanny resemblance to husband Tom. Who got that look first? Is it contagious or is it the result of adapting to a lifetime of elbow-rubbing and shoe-polishing?

So innocuous is the book it could easily have been written in 17th-century Boston. As the reviewer said, "She tells, but did she kiss?" She "loves" Nelson Rockefeller, John F. Kennedy and Robert McNamara, but never admits to "carnal love." She "doesn't condone extramarital sex and [doesn't] recommend it." Neither Mom nor Pop interferes with each other's "friendships." "If I want to consort with another man, I do, and if he wants to consort with another woman, he does. We trust each other."

Really, now! Is Mrs. Braden trying to be discreet for the sake of her eight children? Does she need the money so badly now that Tom has been ignominiously pink-slipted from Crossfire? Is she craving some publicity and excitement for their own sake? Though we can't tell from her wordy but unrevealing memoirs, our guess is that this very ordinary woman, who just happened to be in a few extraordinary situations eons ago, wants to see if she can cash in by some name-dropping and banal comments about a few "personalities" of the day.

Nazi Hunter Debunked

Fueled by his autobiographical account, The Murderers Among Us, which inspired a recent movie starring Ben Kingsley, Simon Wiesenthal has become an international celebrity of mythic proportions. An egotist to the core, he has taken most of the credit for the capture and eventual judicial murder of Adolf Eichmann. His other Nazi-hunting operations, as well as the larger issue of exactly what he himself was doing during WWII, have been the subject of extensive and intensive speculation.

Isser Harel, the founder of Israel's security services, recently disclosed that "Wiesenthal had no role whatsoever in either the discovery, the identification, or the capture of Adolf Eichmann." He flatly dismisses the enduring legend of Wiesenthal as the intrepid chief avenger of the Holocaust.

Harel explained he hadn't publicly attacked Wiesenthal's claims until now because he feared the disclosures would "give satisfaction to Jew haters and Nazi sympathizers." But the 79-year-old Zionist spokeman stated that he simply could no longer maintain his silence: "History must express the truth about this case."

It remains to be seen if Harel will concede the falsity of other aspects of the episodic Six Million.
Taylor
Dememorized

The Robert Taylor Building in Hollywood has been renamed the George Cukor Building, with Taylor's statue removed. It seems the late Majority actor "named names" before the House Un-American Activities Committee (HUAC) back in 1947. Actually, he named only three and identified none as Communists. He simply noted what everyone knew: that actors Howard da Silva and Karen Morley had been disrupting meetings of the Screen Writers Guild and that Lester Cole had been identified by others (correctly) as a Stalinist. Taylor said he had no idea if any of the three were Communists, but did know that he hated Marxism.

The so-called "blacklist" was actually created (under pressure) by 15 top movie executives, among them Louis B. Mayer and Jack Warner. These two richissimo Jews and some of their cohorts actually did name dozens of Communists, yet no one is trying to change the names of Warner Bros. or Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Film star Taylor, who looked pretty but was no great shakes as a thespian, has been consigned to the memory hole because of one Stan Zimmerman, a Jewish writer at Lorimar Studios (which owns the "Cukor Building"), who persuaded 50 of his fellow employees to sign a petition. Lorimar officials refuse to say who the 50 signees are or even why the petition says what it does.

Surrender in L.A.

While most Americans joined with the political establishment in gloating over the ouster of Panamanian dictator Manuel Noriega -- an action hailed as the most successful U.S. military operation since World War II -- Los Angeles officials complained that they are being overwhelmed by an unoustable enemy, drug-peddling, Uzi-toting gangs. "We're in trouble," said Steven Valdivia, who monitors gang activity in Greater Los Angeles, "It's reached the stage of civil insurrection."

The gangs, composed almost exclusively of nonwhites, have over 100,000 heavily armed members. They vastly outnumber the 15,000 police and sheriffs' officers charged with maintaining law and order in the area. "Safe" neighborhoods no longer exist -- even the posh Jewish neighborhoods have their random "drive by" murders.

As the rest of the country celebrated the invasion of Panama, which has done little to reduce the influx of drugs from Latin America, the second largest U.S. city has fallen prey to nonwhite criminal gangs. That, not the capture of Noriega, should have been the U.S. media's "top story" of 1989.

"Allies" Killed at U.S. Army Base

Shortly before Thanksgiving, two Israeli soldiers, Marc Elon and Nachum Golan, were killed in an explosion at the U.S. Army Proving Ground at Yuma (AZ). The Zionists were participating in a test of a 155 mm mobile artillery piece.

The Washington Post, one of the few newspapers to report on the incident, admitted, "the accident called attention to the largely unpublicized but rapidly expanding program of military cooperation between Israel and the United States." Everybody but the public knows that the two countries "share" military technology and weapon development projects. It's an outgrowth of the "strategic cooperation" initiative the Reagan Administration launched with Israel seven years ago. The Jonathan Pollard spy scandal has not been permitted to reduce America's commitment to this very special partnership.

Save Auschwitz!

The Auschwitz concentration camp, key prop in Holocaustiana, is literally falling apart. The barracks, "gas chambers," crematoria and piles of inmates' shoes have deteriorated so severely that alarmed exterminationists fear the relics will crumble into dust. Frank Reiss, vice-president of the Wiesenthal Center, warns that if nothing is done to preserve the camp, in a few years "this site will be practically nonexistent."

The foundation recently agreed to provide technical assistance to the Polish Ministry of Culture, which is in charge of the camp, and has also launched a massive fund drive, aimed at raising $40 million to restore the camp to its former gruesome condition.

Auschwitz is officially designated as a "Monument to the Martyrdom of the Polish and Other Nations." The new regime in Warsaw, headed by Lech Walesa (who claims he has never read a book), has formed a new commission to change the way the museum tells the million-times-repeated tale of woe. Up till now, only passing reference has been made to the alleged murder of millions of Jews at the complex. Lech has promised that, in the future, the camp museum will conform with the version of events presented by such trustworthy Western institutions as the Simon Wiesenthal Center.

Hands Off Hollywood

A federal investigation of mob influence in Hollywood was recently derailed, just as it was reportedly on the verge of hitting paydirt. The probe, conducted over a two-year period, grew out of labor racketeering inquiries that included the review of thousands of subpoenaed documents and hundreds of hours of wiretaps.

Richard Stavin was in charge of the investigation until he resigned from the Justice Department's organized crime strike force. Since his departure, Stavin has charged that Hollywood and other elements of the entertainment industry have been infiltrated by "senior organized crime figures." The mobsters exercise influence over movie executives, producers and agents, and engage in illegal activities ranging from padding payrolls to money laundering through movie budgets.

Another attorney formerly involved in the investigation, Marvin Rudnick, was fired by the Justice Department after Attorney General Thornburgh received complaints by executives of MCA Inc., the entertainment conglomerate. MCA officials have contributed heavily to political campaigns in recent elections. Chairman Lew Wasserman is a close friend and onetime agent of Ronald Reagan.

Reverse Exterminator

The next time you get a visit from the minions of the Sons of Abraham, try this on them: Jane Delynn (Delynski, two generations back), a novelist by trade, a dyke by predisposition and a Jewess by conception, has contributed to a collection of Holocaustiana, a book that has never been published, a book that has never been read. Delynn's comments as found on p. 65 of Testimony: Contemporary Writers Make the Holocaust Personal, edited by David Rosenberg and published by Random House:
Although in general I believe in nuclear disarmament, I am glad Israel has the atomic bomb, and the continued existence of Israel is the only cause for which I consider it justifiable to use nuclear weapons. Let me put this in its starkest and ugliest light: I am not sure, but I believe, that if the choice were between the survival of Israel and that of the remaining 4 or 6 billion peoples of the world, I would choose the 4 million.

If this racist triage were not sufficiently emetic, a few pages later DeLynn regrets "the European war didn't go on a little longer -- so maybe we could have tried the A-bomb on Germany rather than Japan." Though she has no need to say so, considering the tone of her earlier ravings, she confesses she becomes "each year a little more consciously obsessed with the Holocaust . . . . It is a wound I want constantly to fester."

DeLynn's hate continues to runneth over: "I am not interested in justice for anyone, unless there is justice -- first -- for the Jews . . . ." She bitches about Poland, which has neglected "to enact a memorial to its 3 million murdered Jews. I was glad when Solidarity was crushed, and Poles were placed in a state of martial law." Lech Walesa's recent successes must have driven her to the depths of despair. As to Germany, "What, practically speaking, can one do with a nation in which virtually everyone over the age of ten, twelve, fifteen . . . was either a participant in or accessory to murder?"

While DeLynn was an SDS partyliner at Columbia, she had moments of that eternal Jewish flirtation with the Aesthetic Prop: "my double marginality (as Jew and closet gay) had me yearn for the kind of prototypically handsome white WASP . . . ."

Instauration has been firm in the belief that when it comes to the art of hating, Jews are also being courted by Republicans as never before. Following the New York City mayoral contest, where winner David Dinkins received less than 40% of the Jewish vote, instead of the 70% plus traditionally given to Democrats, Atwater made a quiet visit to Zoo City, where he addressed a group of Jewish leaders convened by realtor George Clark. Among the highlights of Atwater's speech: on his recent trip to Israel, he tasted gefilte fish (laced with tabasco) during a visit to a kibbutz -- and loved every bite.

Bushi is trying to persuade Gorbachev to join him in a move to repeal the UN's 1975 "Zionism is Racism" resolution. Vice President Quayle has been tapped to convince UN delegates that what they know to be true is not true. In remarks rebroadcast around the world over the Voice of America, Quayle was quoted as saying that the campaign to "delegitimize" Israel "has been waged with an obsessiveness, a vindictiveness, and a total disregard for the truth." He went on to affirm (was he crossing his fingers?) that "Zionism is not, and never has been, a form of racism."

Republican officeholders have been tripping over themselves to show their support for Israel, the "strategic importance" of which becomes less clear with each passing day. In a direct mail campaign launched just before Christmas, Senator Robert Packwood (R-OR) wrote to loaded Jews living as far away from his home state as New York City. He reminded prospective Jewish donors:

"My outspoken support for Israel has made me a perfect target for defeat . . . . At a time when it is more vital than ever for me to remain in the U.S. Senate, I am more greatly at risk of defeat than ever before. My opponents would charge that I spend too much time defending Israel. You and I know there are too few friends of Israel in the U.S. Senate . . . . Israel needs me in the Senate. And I need you."

Although Republicans count on the "pro-family" constituency for success at the polls, this has not discouraged Atwater and other Republican pols from quietly making inroads to homosexuals. The Atwater crowd has distanced itself from those few Republican officeholders who have publicly challenged the powerful Homosexual Lobby in Washington. AIDS "education" funds continue to be channeled to homosexual groups. Most recently, the National Gay & Lesbian Task Force and the Human Rights Campaign Fund, the largest faggy PAC, praised a Bush directive ordering the 1990 Census to count queer couples.

Meanwhile, conservative Republicans sputter and fume over the fact that the elements they claim to represent -- mainly the white middle class -- are being ignored.

Some Real Irish Numbers

How many people from the Emerald Isle grace the shores of the United States? It's an old demographic mystery that the 1980 Census didn't do much to clear up when it listed 40.7 million.

Just as there are two kinds of electricity, positive and negative, so there are two kinds of Irishmen: the devout, industrious Presbyterian of Ulster, whose ancestors originally hailed from the Scottish Lowlands and northern England's border country; and the word-loving, light-hearted, politically minded Catholic of the Ould Sod. Patrick Henry, Andrew Jackson, John C. Calhoun and Andrew Mellon were Scotch Irish from Northern Ireland; the Kennedys, Tip O'Neill and Daniel Patrick Moynihan are of southern Irish provenance. It's obvious that the figure of 40.7 million needs to be sorted out. The question is not how many Irish are in the U.S., but how many northern Irish and southern Irish?

Some interesting number crunching along these lines can be found in We the People, An Atlas of America’s Ethnic Diversity by James P. Allen and Eugene P. Turner (Macmillan, NY). According to the authors, who have examined the ethnic composition of America county by county, state by state, region by region, there are 10 million Americans who are Irish on both sides, and almost 30 million more who have one-eighth or more Irish genes in their genomes. Of those who identified themselves as being echt Irish, almost half were Catholic.

Of the 12.5 million Irish Americans in the South, where 35% of all Irishers live, 3 million said they were as much Scottish as Irish. A decade ago, 60,000 New Yorkers and 18,000 Bostonians claimed to have been born in Ireland. New England is a disproportionately Irish region, especially in and around Boston.

Many questions still remain as to Irish numbers. Some may be answered by this year's Census. At least we now know that the 40.7 million figure of the 1980 Census is so much blamey, since it leaves the false impression that the great majority of what the government head counters call Irish were Irish Catholics, and the Scotch Irish or Anglo Irish, who arrived a century before the southern Irish, were a relatively minor component of the Irish immigration.

Art Creeps

Paul Warhola, retired junk dealer and brother of the late pop artist, Andy Warhol, who dropped the “a” in his surname, paints pictures by dipping chicken feet in pigment and applying the daubs to his canvases. He also churns out Heinz 57 ketchup bottles in the Campbell's Soup can tradition of Andy, for which he charges as much as $10,000 each. Genius obviously runs in the family.

And just to keep the record straight, Andres Serrano, the photographer who dunked a crucifix in urine, has an Afro-Cuban mother and a Honduran father. Serrano's other masterpiece is a photo he entitled, Ejaculate in Trajectory, which Instauration won’t describe for fear of running afoul of obscenity laws. Serrano has sold 14 copies of his Christ-bashing photo, the last for $10,000. He has also received a foundation grant for another $10,000. Blasphemy is profitable these days, provided Yahweh and Allah are not blasphemed.

Unmasking the Worst President

During the 1964 presidential campaign, hundreds of thousands of copies of J. Evetts Haley's book, A Texan Looks at Lyndon, were distributed. Among other Johnson misdeeds, Haley charged that LBJ, then running for president against Barry Goldwater, had won his Senate seat by massive vote fraud and had amassed a huge personal fortune by hardened influence peddling. That the national media failed to give any credence to Haley's accusations was a great boon to Johnson's campaign. Once in the White House, he did more damage to white America than any other president, with the possible exception of Abe Lincoln. Not only did LBJ push through a huge packet of "civil rights" legislation, but he craftily helped cover up the Israeli attack on the USS Liberty in the 1967 Six Day War.

Now, with 14 years of research under his belt, historian Robert A. Caro, a neo-con jew, has confirmed the validity of many of Haley's charges in the second volume of his projected four-volume biography of Johnson, Means of Ascent (Knopf, NY). Caro not only proves that Johnson's record of brave combat during WWII was manufactured; he also shoots down the canard that LBJ's million-dollar broadcasting empire, based on Austin radio station KTBC, was created by Lady Bird's money and brains. It was, Caro asserts, the direct result of Lyndon's political string-pulling.

The biography's most explosive revelations concern the 1948 Texas Senate campaign, where Johnson stole the election from Coke Stevenson, a former governor and traditional Southern conservative. The facts were not unearthed by Caro, but he recalled all the sordid details. Johnson, who was trailing in the balloting, finally "won" by 87 votes out of 988,295 officially counted. Two hundred and three of Johnson's votes, according to the confession of an Hispanic who was in on the vote fraud, were supplied by dead Mexican Americans, some of whom had been illegal immigrants.

From the Senate, Johnson went on to become the 36th U.S. President, with the damming consequences that we and our descendants will have to put up with until America's doomsday, which LBJ did so much to hasten.

Noble Savage?

The Honorable Member of Congress for Illinois's Second House District, Gus Savage, has won the Democratic primary, guaranteeing that he will, barring death or imprisonment, go back to Washington to serve a sixth term. Savage, a widower who has one of the worst attendance records on Capitol Hill, was charged by a female Peace Corps worker with harassing her with "improper sexual advances" while he was on a "fact finding" mission to Zaire. The House Ethics Committee agreed and gave him a slap-on-the-wrist reprimand.

This did not discourage Savage's black South Side constituents from giving him 51% of the vote in the March Democratic primary. While being endorsed in person by such black Demo bigwigs as Majority Whip Bill Gray and New York Congressman Charles Rangel, Savage reminded voters that his opponent, Melvin Reynolds, a Negro Rhodes scholar, "received 82% of all his individual contributions from members of AIPAC." During the final days of the campaign, Savage traveled with bow-tied bodyguards provided by Louis Farrakhan's Nation of Islam and refused to talk with any representatives of what he called "those whites who control all of the people's television and newspapers."

Republicans have to apologize around the clock for Louisiana's Republican State Senator David Duke. The Dems are somewhat reluctant to badmouth their race-baiting legislator. They are not too worried about Savage, however, since the media long ago developed a habit of shutting one eye to black racism.

Manhattan Gold Miners

A staple of Holocaust literature deals with charges that the Nazis ordered Jewish "special commandos" to plunder newly gassed kosher corpses of gold fillings before sending them to the ovens. The truth is, such gold scavenging went on and is still going on, not at Mauthausen, but at funeral parlors in Manhattan.

From Zoo City mortuaries, teeth with gold crowns and fillings have been making their way to the diamond ghetto on West 47th Street, where they are sold as "scrap." Thrown into a 3,000-degree oven, the teeth melt and the precious yellow metal flows to the bottom, where it forms into a brick. The bricks are then sold to a refiner, who removes the alloys, leaving the 24-karat gold all shiny and polished up for resale.

In what was perhaps a fit of exaggeration, a prominent gold trader opined, "There's not a person in a cemetery in this country..."
that has gold teeth. Or only a few, anyway.” Funeral critic Jessica Mitford, the renegade Mitford, concedes, “They all do it. They’ve always done it.”

But why hasn’t this practice received wider attention? Mitford judged and exten-uated by saying that there were better scandals to reveal when she wrote her exposé,
The American Way of Death. A more likely reason provided by investigator Phillip Weiss: “Talk of teeth buying makes the gold traders uncomfortable. Many are Jewish, and it reminds them of Nazi atrocities.”

Nazi Pollution

Although the Third Reich went to a fiery grave 45 years ago, there is no end to the horrors to which the defunct National Socialist regime has been held accountable.
The latest concerns the environment. Who is to blame for the tar balls that wash ashore on Florida’s Atlantic coast? The Associated Press has given currency to a theory blaming German U-boat action dating back to the years 1942-44. During that time, U-boats sank 148 tankers and many other ships in the waters ranging from Canada to the Caribbean.

Oil, sometimes taking the form of tar balls, does wash ashore, creating problems for tourists and resort operators. But oil usually degrades in two to three years’ time.
Having studied the pollution potential of the sunken ships laying offshore, a federal agency judged the damage to be minor.

In the wake of recent major oil spills, it has been revealed that hundreds of them,
large and small, have occurred along U.S. coasts. Environmental regulations have been ignored. Ship inspections have often been perfunctory. But now we know who are the real guilty parties: those eternal villains, the Nazis.

S & L Looter

David J. Paul, the chairman of CenTrust
Savings & Loan in Florida, lived rather well at the S&L’s expense. Federal authorities said Paul had charged the following to the ailing S&L:

- $30 million for an art collection, many pieces of which were kept in Paul’s home...
- $1.4 million to lease a jet and
  hangar...
- $363,000 for personal guard
  services...
- $257,000 for a $6 million
  insurance policy...
- $233,000 for a yacht
  ... $150,000 for home security equipment and air-conditioning...
- $47,000
  for 35 nights Paul spent at a New York hotel...
- $26,000 a year to lease a Mercedes Benz.

Although CenTrust lost $76 million from January 1988 to September 1989, Paul received $5 million in salary.

ETHNICITY:

- Hispanic: A person of Mexican, Puerto Rican, Cuban, Central or South American, or other Spanish culture or origin, regardless of race

RACE:

- American Indian or Alaskan Native: A person having origins in any of the original peoples of North America, and who maintains cultural identification through tribal affiliation or community recognition.
- Asian or Pacific Islander: A person having origins in any of the original peoples of the Far East, Southeast Asia, the Indian subcontinent, or the Pacific Islands. This area includes, for example, China, India, Japan, Korea, the Philippine Islands, and Samoa.
- Black: A person having origins in any of the black racial groups of Africa.
- White: A person having origins in any of the original peoples of Europe, North Africa, or the Middle East.

SEX:

- 1 - Male
- 2 - Female

On an almost daily basis, we hear how venomous it is for South Africa to classify people by race. But what about the omnipresent racial classifications in the U.S. -- not only the personal identifications, but the official government taxonomy. Take a gander at the “U.S. Background Survey Questionnaire 79-2” for federal employment, the title and bottom third of which are shown above. Every respondent must identify himself or herself by race, or by what the U.S. government designates as race. Note that whites come a poor fourth on the list, just ahead of the last-placed “Other.” Note how whites are defined as people “having origins in any of the original peoples of Europe, North Africa, or the Middle East.” Federal raciologists seem oblivious to the multitude of black genes floating around North Africa and the Levant, which accounts for the dark coloration that Latins themselves recognize as a splash of the tarbrush. Yet in the U.S., these swart people are statistically white and are included in all those fancy compilations of IQ scores, high-school and college dropouts, criminal acts, AIDS cases and whatnot. So from now on, whenever you see the “white” entry in government charts, remember how many “off whites” have been forced into that category.
A

MERICA'S ENCHANTMENT WITH Israel is dissipating, but ever so slowly. Apparently, no revelation about the Zionist State will have a Hiroshima effect on the one-sided "partnership," but a story is developing which may do as much damage as the Pollard spy scandal.

On December 12, 1985, some 256 U.S. soldiers coming home for Christmas died in a plane crash near Gander, Newfoundland. The cause was officially attributed to wing ice, but hard questions are being asked by — among others — columnist Jack Anderson: such as, why did the U.S. Army want the wreckage bulldozed within days, if not hours, of the crash? And why was a Lebanon-based Iranian group's claim of responsibility dismissed as a lie by U.S. officials, especially since, two days before the tragedy, Ollie North had noted the Iranians were livid about having received the wrong missiles as part of the arms-for-hostages deal then in progress?

Even Anderson respects certain unpublished restrictions on a free press in this country. He refers to the U.S. Army being unwittingly used by "covert operatives." This may be his code word for Mossad agents working inside or outside the U.S. government. His use of the generic term, "missiles," actually refers to an advanced version of the Hawk, which Iran desperately needed to defend its oil fields against Iraqi jets. North & Co. sent the right missiles, but, somewhere in the pipeline, Israel substituted an older, less capable version of the Hawk. This outraged the Iranians, who were reportedly already angry about Carter's failed attempt to rescue American hostages held in the U.S. embassy in Teheran. Eight Americans died and five more were wounded in the ill-fated helicopter mission.

Those 256 soldiers had been stationed in the Sinai as part of a U.S. military force to protect Israel's borders. If there had been no Israel or, if the American government had not put Israel's interests above its own, they might still be alive.

Ultimately, nothing more may come of this than all the other scandals involving Israel, but surely there has to be a limit to the Majority's patience somewhere.

Revisionists must labor in the certainty that their opponents will never publicly acknowledge why so many Shoah claims are being scaled back or quietly abandoned. They can, however, take some satisfaction in the discomfort they are causing Holocaustorians.

Consider Yehuda Bauer's plight, as expressed in the Jerusalem Post's international edition (Sept. 30, 1989). He is deeply concerned that excessive claims regarding Auschwitz by Jews and Poles "were supplying those who deny the Holocaust with the best possible argument."

All parties agree that most of the Auschwitz dead were either Poles or Jews. Bauer is particularly worried about the oft-repeated "4 million," a number still engraved on a stone marker there. Since Jews have long claimed that 2.5 million of their own died at Auschwitz, 90% of them Jews. That's a drastic drop from earlier numbers, but a necessary drop, thanks to revisionism. If the notoriously stubborn Poles stick to their 1.5 million figure, Jewish arithmeticians will have to do a lot of quick refiguring.

Anyone with an IQ exceeding that of a lobotomized sheep knows the media are biased against whites, but even Instaurationists can sometimes be amazed at how slanted the slant is.

Consider black columnist Clarence Page, a Pulitzer Prize winner and an occasional guest on the MacNeil-Lehrer News Hour. In a late 1989 syndicated blow off, he warned that white "Haters and Bigots Endanger Us All." As evidenced by his employing "hate" or a variation thereof at least 15 times, Clarence has truly mastered the learning tool of repetition. Skeptics can check the columnist's objectivity by reviewing his past articles on the African National Congress, where he never once mentioned the black strongarm group's love of necklacing, monkeying around with car bombs and perhaps even cannibalism. ANC cadres (including Nelson Mandela) used to be called terrorists by no less than George Bush, who Henry "Hank" Cohen, U.S. assistant secretary of state for Africa, redefined them as nationalists. No similar redefinitions are planned for the PLO. Terrorism, like beauty, is subjective.

Having confirmed that Mr. Page is fair play personified, his syndicated article was . . . well, surprising. It dwelled on crimes attributed to white extremists, even though nine of every 10 racial crimes are committed each year against whites.* Come now, Clarence, in 700,000 reported minority-on-white crimes of violence, not one rape had an element of race-based malice? Not one murder or assault was a hate crime? Maybe 10? Maybe 1,000? Get real, Clarence! Do the right thing. Hollywood recently televised a docudrama based loosely, very loosely, on the Howard Beach incident because, as one actor stated, "It's like Dachau; you can't remind them often enough." So how about a column demanding a movie to remind "them" about Virginia Beach? Or wilding? Alas, Clarence has no time to write about white victims. He be too busy penning diatribes against white racists.

Ponderable Quote

The common notion that free speech prevails in the United States always makes me laugh . . . . Twice in one lifetime I have been forced to shut down altogether . . . . I was constantly menaced by censhships of a dozen different varieties . . . . The American people, I am convinced, really detest free speech.

The Diary of H.L. Mencken
The conception of a closed West European Community has been dealt a mortal blow by the apertura to the East. To be sure, the European Common Market will come into being. To be sure, Mrs. Thatcher has been readier than most to remove tariff barriers. Other countries, however, are dragging their feet, and I can safely predict there will not be an untrammeled single market by 1992. Much less will there be a politically centralised European Community. Mrs. Thatcher will fight that as long as she is in power. So would a Labour government, whose good ole boys have never overcome an instinctive repugnance for what they used to call "The White Man's Club." I seriously doubt whether socialist regimes simultaneously in power in France and Germany would alter this repugnance.

But there are more cogent reasons for thinking that the European Community cannot be confined to Western Europe. The Adenauer-de Gaulle conception of a French-West German axis has been dealt a death blow by the unstoppable process of German recoupling. Adenauer was a Rhineland Catholic, only too happy to stress linkage with France, whereas the German center of gravity has now been shifted towards what remains of Protestant Germany and the East. Mitterrand's bitter reaction to Chancellor Kohl's very mild quid pro quo for recognising the Oder-Neisse frontier with Poland should not be taken as anything more than jealous frustration.

In addition, there is the notoriously unrepresentative nature of the European Community structure. The European Parliament has very little power. It's unlikely to be allowed to become more powerful because, under the proportional representation system, France's Front National, the German Republican Party and the Italian and Greek fascist factions will form a bloc that will be reinforced later by Haider's Austrian Freedom Party and other right-wing groups. Real power has been delegated by the governments of the 12 to a "Commission" to which no member is directly elected. No one is going to make many sacrifices to perpetuate this rickety system.

Let us take the more important nations in turn. Britain is in ferment. Mrs. Thatcher's idea of making everyone pay for the upkeep of the free-spending local councils, instead of just the fortunate homeowners, was splendid in conception. In the still English town of Hereford (the ford of the armies) on the Welsh border, the people would have had to pay £187 ($333) per head, while those living in the Haringey district of London, where the Red council has been in the habit of giving large sums to lesbian and other revolutionary groups. Real power has been delegated by the governments of the 12 to a "Commission" to which no member is directly elected. No one is going to make many sacrifices to perpetuate this rickety system.

Predictably the whole left-leaning establishment, including the Tory Wets, forced Mrs. Thatcher to agree to make poll taxes in the countryside subsidise the inner cities. The Labour Party, which refused to specify what it proposes to do about the upkeep of local councils, merely collects the political dividends.

But Mrs. Thatcher is not helpless. M15 has opportunely come up with evidence that Arthur Scargill, who led the miners' strike some years back, received money from Colonel Gaddafi. That will make the Iron Lady's fervent Jewish constituency sit up. Nor will the British electorate be pleased to hear that the blacks in Brixton responded to the poll tax by starting a few fires. Actually, I don't care what happens to Mrs. Thatcher, since she surrendered to behind-the-scenes lobbying, allowed retrospective legislation which permitted prosecution of alleged war crimes (but only if committed on German-occupied territory in WWII) and announced to the Board of Deputies of British Jews her opposition to German unity.

When I think about the new Britain, I realise why civil wars are nastier than any other kind. The idea of killing François or Fritz or Ivan does not fill me with enthusiasm. But in a civil war, one kills the people one really hates, and to hell with the consequences.

Northern Ireland continues as unstable as ever, while to the south, the Republic has made a mess of its economy. The Irish continue to be anti-English, but are desperate to emigrate to the countries where what remains of the old WASP influence provides the binding force -- and the moolah! The Ould Sodders are automatically allowed to vote in England (and usually support the socialists), whereas Brits are not allowed to vote in the Irish Republic. As for Scotland, devolution should bring it face to face with the fact that modern Scots are a dependent people -- not the here's-tae-us-wha'-like-us toughies of earlier days. The Welsh are even more dependent.

Jewish intellectuals have a necklock on the media in the fair land of France, while the Muslim community grows apace. Spain, anxious not to annoy North African Arabs, is permitting their mass immigration across the Pyrenees. But Spaniards will regret it. The huge population of the Maghrib, plus that of the darker countries further south, will make a reality of Louis XIV's dictum that Africa begins at the Pyrenees.

Until recently, Italians looked on complacently while North Africans made their way up the boot of Europe and infiltrated France. Now that many Arabs and a lesser number of blacks are remaining in Italy, the Italians are not quite so complacent.

Turning to Eastern Europe, the Poles, worried about the unification mania of the Germans, have demanded recognition of the Oder-Neisse line, from behind which they and the Russians drove out nine million Germans and killed a further 3.7 million at WWII's end. Yet Poland refuses to allow any substantial rights to the remaining Silesians, who will no doubt make good their threat to start another intifada. Meanwhile, Poles, whose economy has always been a byword for inefficiency, pour into Berlin, looking for work.

Now that there are no more visa restrictions, Romanians and Romanian Gypsies are flowing into Austria. In March 1990, Austrian Minister of the Interior Löschnak tried to plant 700 Romanians in an old barracks in a little village in the Burgenland. The villagers were up in arms. Then, under pressure from their church leaders and the coalition parties, they were forced to accept 180 of them, while the rest were billeted in families in the surrounding villages. Cardinal König has come out openly in favour of helping all the refugees. Christian treachery is not confined to England and America.

The Hungarians provide a bright spot. Though some are rather prone to sharp dealing, which can be ascribed to many years of black-marketeering, all in all, they deserve a pretty clean bill of health.
In Yugoslavia, the Serbs are bullying the large Albanian majority in the traditionally Serbian province of Kosovo. Le Pen, who is nothing if not logical, sympathises with the Serbs against the Muslim Albanians. I prefer the Slovenes, who are partially descended from the Vandals who settled in what is now Slovenia when the Roman Empire collapsed (and who still have 600-odd old Germanic words in their language).

I feel quite friendly towards the Bulgars, though I must say they had some pretty nasty apparatus in the old days.

Of the Czechs and the Slovaks, I can only say that they are typical Central Europeans, without German creativity.

Finally, there is the Soviet Union. I certainly sympathise with the desire of the Baltic republics for independence. They contain such a lot of pretty girls. Unfortunately, Gorbachev's new law, which only permits secession from the Soviet Union if three-quarters of the electorate vote for it, will throw a monkey wrench in Protestant Latvia's bid for independence; the number of Russian immigrants is too large.

I have no doubt that the Muslim parts of the Soviet Union will finally break away, and perhaps the Christian Caucasian peoples. Moldavia will probably revert to Romania (which wouldn't dream of granting any rights to its large Hungarian minority). Chances are both Byelorussia and the Ukraine will be granted a degree of cultural independence. As for the Russian Soviet Republic, it embraces a large part of Europe, as well as Asia across Siberia all the way to the Kamchatka peninsula. Since that territory is geopolitically vital to the white race, I hope fervently that some sort of axis can be developed between Russia and Germany. The U.S. might well object, but I anticipate that the American superpower will grow less and less super as the days roll by.

South African Drug Dealers Run Amok

Lethal Weapon II is a witty, action-packed film, which sets a new world's record for celluloid racist propaganda. The movie features the return of our two heroes, Sergeants Riggs and Murtaugh. Riggs, the white, is an unbalanced Vietnam vet, played with a sort of crazy abandon by the trés Anglo-Saxon Mel Gibson. Murtaugh, the black, is a faithful husband and father, acted with dignified restraint by Danny Glover.

In the original Lethal Weapon, our dynamic duo battled a group of white ex-CIA heroin dealers. This time, the baddies are white South African diplomats in Los Angeles who moonlight as big-time drug dealers. (As we all know, the Boers long ago elbowed aside the Colombians to dominate the international drug trade.)

Chief bad guy is played by the jowly, malevolent Joss Ackland, who bears a passing resemblance to P.W. Botha -- entirely coincidental, of course. In Ackland's first scene, he wipes out one of his own operatives who has let millions in Krugerrands -- the international currency of drug dealers -- slip into the hands of the police.

Murtaugh's character is established by his reaction to his daughter's appearance in a TV spot. Not Murtaugh. This prim, puritanical black man is clearly mortified at the sight of such a pretty girl. Unfortunately, Gorbachev's new law, which only permits secession from the Soviet Union if three-quarters of the electorate vote for it, will throw a monkey wrench in Protestant Latvia's bid for independence; the number of Russian immigrants is too large.

The plot starts to unfold -- and to move to Cloud 9 -- when Riggs and Murtaugh are assigned to protect a witness in a drug case, Leon Getz, a money launderer for the dealers (and the only character true to his ethnicity in the entire movie). Getz remains an annoying presence throughout the remainder of the film, a wimpy counterpoint to the machismo of our two Übermenschen.

Riggs and Murtaugh, being the adventurous sorts they are, convince Getz to take them to the Bel Air stronghold of one of the dealers, which -- lo and behold -- turns out to be the lavish pad of Joss Ackland, who defuses the confrontation by crustily claiming diplomatic immunity. The police reluctantly depart the premises.

Riggs and Murtaugh, however, continue to badger the South Africans at their consulate downtown. While there, Riggs spots a stunning blue-eyed blonde, who brazenly flirts with him right in front of her boss (Ackland), defying all known rules of official politics.

Obviously, no woman this beautiful would be in the movie for any reason other than to be the romantic interest for Mel. So the question immediately pops into the viewer's mind: How can a decent human being like Mel Gibson have a love affair with someone with a South African accent? Sure enough, after a cute pick-up scene, she utters the magic words: "There are a lot of things I don't like about my country." Voilà! She's been cleared for the clinch.

In the meantime, since the South Africans don't take kindly to having their business interrupted, they respond in the only way intelligent, logical drug dealers would -- by arranging a murderous sweep of the homes of their host country's police force. (How better to keep a low profile for a secretive smuggling operation?) When it comes to planning Riggs' demise, they arrange a fleet of helicopter gunships with armaments so formidable that they could only have come from the South African army. (As any student of Realpolitik will tell you, the Pentagon's chief worry these days is repelling an imminent South African invasion.)

When Riggs and Murtaugh finally track the bad guys down, they are about to ship out with their treasure trove of ill-gotten cash. In bold letters, right below the name of the boat, is Hamburg. (West Germany, of course, is another nation known for its prominent role in the international drug trade.)

When the two detectives have their final showdown with Ackland, the latter, after firing salvoes at our heroes, finds he has run out of ammo. Then, in one of the lamest lines ever dreamed up by a Jewish screenwriter, he once again declares his diplomatic immunity. Bang! He's dead.

In the meantime, Riggs' blonde lass has been killed by her murderous countrymen. No matter! The last scene shows the wounded Riggs being cradled by Murtaugh as they await the ambulance. The real romance is sure to continue in Lethal Weapon III.

Ponderable Quote

Popular opinion is the greatest lie in the world.

Hear! Hear! Jennifer Lawson has been appointed PBS's executive vice president for national programming. From the standpoint of mind bending and cerebral massaging, that is one of the most powerful positions in the contemporary hierarchy of American power. Lawson, because of the new financial restructuring of public broadcasting, has, in her own words, “more authority” and “far more resources than any predecessor.”

Who Jennifer Lawson? What gives her the right to pick and choose what the more civilized segments of the TV audience see and hear in their bully box?

Well, to start with she is a graduate of Alabama’s Tuskegee Institute. Secondly, as the Los Angeles Times (Jan. 3, 1990) informed us, “Her interest in television grew out of her involvement in the civil rights movement . . .” Thirdly, she has had some experience in the dispersal of public monies when she was employed by the Corporation for Public Broadcasting. Fourthly? Fourthly? There is really little else she has going for her, except the highest qualification of all: Jennifer Lawson, as most readers have probably guessed by now, is a Negress. And by the way, what are some of Jennifer’s plans for new PBS shows? Again, we turn to the Los Angeles Times: “She would like to see PBS develop more programs on the American Indian culture and on the Pacific Islands.”

Ted Turner boasts about colorizing the old films that were produced before the advent of Technicolor. As anyone with a TV set can deduce, there’s a lot of other colorizing going on out there in the entertainment world.

Next time you come across some poll that purports to indicate how many voters will opt for candidate A, a liberal, and candidate B, a conservative, may I suggest a way to pick up some easy money. Simply bet that B will win, even though all the pollsters pick A. Or, to be utterly safe, wager that B will pick up a much larger cut of the votes than the polls predict.

Here’s a specific example: On the eve of the recent Nicaraguan presidential election, several TV anchors and reporters fell all over themselves forecasting a victory for the antigriingo, Moscow stand-in, Danny Ortega. Suppose you had a couple of liberal friends over for dinner and they were sitting in front of the tube while Ed Rabel of NBC was reporting, as he did, “Polls won’t close here for another 30 minutes, but the widespread belief that the Sandinistas will prevail has shifted thinking far beyond the ballot box. The topic of the day is: How will a freely elected Sandinista government be treated by the United States?”

Now, let’s say these same friends were also with you when you tuned in to Ted Koppel, who looks like Howdy Doody and makes even less sense, and heard these words: “This coming Sunday, when general elections are held in Nicaragua, there will be so many international observers that there will be one for every 850 voters. Almost certainly, the Sandinistas will win.”

As your liberal friends smile broadly, as their eyes glow with anticipated triumph, suppose you butt in and say: “Ortega hasn’t got a chance. It’s Señora Violeta Chamorro all the way.” Your guests will look at you with a mixture of disgust and pity. You will stare them down and say, “Wanna bet?” The libs will be so anxious to make money on a “sure thing” they will give you odds as high as five to one. The next day you’ll be $500 richer on a $100 bet.

You could have made even more money on the New York mayoral and Virginia gubernatorial elections. The pollsters had the two black Democrats winning with comfortable 5% or more margins. You could have had as many takers as you wanted at whatever odds you wanted, if you had bet that Dinkins and Wilder would have barely squeaked through.

The networks, anchormen, TV reporters and the pollsters can’t help “tainting” all their predictions with wishful thinking. If a smart Instaurationist, who knows all about the media’s closed shop liberalism, challenges them to put their money where their mouths are, they’ll take the bait every time.

Whenever harassed Majority members fend off assaults by minority thugs or take the law into their own hands by shooting at some murderous nonwhite, the TV talk shows warm up the old debate about vigilantism. Crossfire in late March served up Todd Broom, the Texan who killed a black after the latter had shot down a live-in girlfriend, an airline stewardess, in cold blood in a Dallas parking lot. Michael Kinsley, as expected, led the cheering for throwing the book at Broom. Pat Buchanan stuck up for the Texas version of Bernie Goetz.

An ACLU spokesman must have mouthed the Constitution and the Bill of Rights five or six times while calling for the arrest and punishment of Broom. Yet neither Buchanan nor a creepy, Roy Cohn-looking Dallas talk show host, David Gold, who were all for letting Broom go, brought up the one persuasive rebuttal to the “due process” argument.
Laws are not made by God, no matter what happened during that thunderstorm on Mt. Sinai. Laws are made by men for men. Laws are also promulgated at a certain time and place by certain types of men. The Founding Fathers, who wrote the Constitution and the Bill of Rights, were of British extraction and their legal mechanisms were not devised for Indians or West African slaves or Hispanics, but for a specific people, the overwhelming majority of whom were British or descendants of Britons.

If James Madison and George Mason were alive today and cognizant of the crime wave that has turned large parts of America's largest cities into quasi-jungles, does anyone with an ounce of gray matter believe they would have produced the same amendments to the Constitution as they had two centuries earlier? They were trying to protect the hard-won liberties of their fellow British Americans by putting a legal noose around the necks of future demagogues and tyrants. Today, the problem is vastly different -- to protect ordinary citizens, not against the malevolence of despots but against runaway crime.

American demography is nothing like it was in the late 18th century. Then, the white population was at least 95% British or British-descended. Today, the British element in the country is probably no more than 25%. If men change, laws must change. The Constitution worked fairly well when the free population was largely of the same race as the men who wrote it. Today, this same Constitution, with its first Ten Amendments, by its idiotic coddling of criminals, is actually one of the main causes of the intolerable amount of crime that is ravaging the U.S.

While minority racists are busy trashing the First Amendment in order to mute criticism of their antiwhite activities, the Majority is being immobilized by the Fifth Amendment, the due process amendment, that has resulted in the creation of the monstrous legal establishment which makes it possible for criminals to commit the most heinous crimes again and again with only minimal intermissions in jail.

Talk radio station KKEY, also known as the Eagle's Nest because of its alleged right-wing slant, was vandalized sometime during the wee hours of March 5. Although several of its blabbermouthing hosts profess to be conservatives, all save one have to the party line whenever the subject of the Holocaust crops up. The surprising exception is Sylvester Hendricks, who is both black and blind. Hendricks has courteously interviewed Tom Metzger several times on the air and has usually allowed revisionists or Majority activists who call in considerable leeway to express their views. For this, he incurred the wrath of Portland's flaming liberals. Hendricks claims to have received a phone threat at home just hours before he discovered that the studio had been trashed.

As of this writing, no arrests have been made. Are we in for a replay of the 1984 coverup of the torching of the Institute of Historical Review? In any case, the story already has taken a following comments.

Poisonalities. Barbara Walters, the 50% Jewess recently apotheosized in one of those mutually backscratching TV award orgies, told her friend, Leona Helmsley, the 100% Jewess: "Be strong, be strong." when the Queen of Greed was sentenced to four years in a confined space.

After his face was scrawled with a swastika in a Los Angeles Airport last year, Morton Downey Jr. emerged to claim it was the work of Neo-Nazis. Thanks be, the publicity ploy wasn't able to save his sewer-scraping TV show from a well merited demise. But you can't keep an ex-con down. At about the last minute, $650 was bid for a collation with the Jewish pornographess.

From a British Insaturator. Private Eye has no particular regard for the Phil Donahue show, as can be gleaned from the following comments.

Donahue was one of the pioneers of Victim Television, an American idea of financially-attractive cheapness in which a collection of mental or physical wrecks are banked up in a studio while a gentle, sensitive suit walks smoothly around them, pressing them on the more sensational details of their experiences... Occasionally, with guilty justification, the host will reflect on how it Helps To Talk About It. What it essentially "helps" is the ratings... The view in Britain was always that these programmes were the absolute cesspool of the national crap produced there...

Hemos have it made on TV. I am told the networks supinely send any scripts dealing with queers to pansy activist groups for approval or revision. Sometimes the networks even pay the fairies for their editorial work. If this is true, then the limp-wristed lobby must have had a field day with Forbidden Passions, a fag soap opera that is now on cable in 16 cities. Some episodes, I hear, show men kissing in bed.

From Satcom Sam. I heard on TV recently that Arsenio Hall (did his mama intend to dub him L'il Arsenic and just couldn't spell!) has held up Coca-Cola for an astronomical amount before agreeing to do a commercial. Among other concessions, the company must donate heavily to "minority causes." Arsenic himself will use some of the dough to fund several minority institutions, or so he says.
WELL, AS READERS KNOW, the national sluice-gates have been opened by F.W. de Klerk and South Africa capitulated to the ensuing black torrent even before Namibia had time to install Sam Nujoma as its first president. The African National Congress has been unbanned, together with the South African Communist Party and a host of similar organizations. Nelson Mandela is no longer a jailbird. It is his first president. The African National Congress has capitulated to the ensuing black torrent even before Namibia had time to install Sam Nujoma as its first president.

The army is white. The students smashed 90 shop windows with half-bricks, collected from a building site, and damaged 100 cars. Half-bricks were also thrown at whites. Stalls and restaurant tables were overturned. Watching the young black's behavior, one might have thought they were still at home in their townships. Cape Town's Mayor Gordon Oliver, an ultra-liberal, called the violence "tragic." As if his integrationist policies hadn't been the cause of it all!

Mandela's speech was the standard rhetoric of black demagogues. He said that South Africa owed its wealth to the labour of black workers, that they needed a decent living wage for their toil, that "our people" need proper housing, and not ghettos like Soweto, that they seek justice and not injustice, and so on. It was the stereotypical patter calculated to appeal to the black masses, the press and himself. Nevertheless, Mandela dismayed liberals and his Nationalist Party liberators by calling for the continued international isolation of "the apartheid regime." Far from proposing an end to hostilities and the opening of peace talks, so ardently desired by the Cape Times, he shouted: "We have waited too long for our freedom. We can wait no longer. Now is the time to intensify the struggle on all fronts."

Mandela was parroting the official ANC line as enunciated by Alfred Nzo, the terrorist group's acting president in Lusaka, who had stated, no doubt at Jewish Joe Slovo's prompting, that the armed struggle would continue until South Africa ended the state of emergency and released all political prisoners, including those convicted of violence. The ANC insists there can be no peace until apartheid has been completely swept away, which it has been. Of course, they don't really mean apartheid. They mean white rule or, rather, the white man himself. It is not enough that whites should lie flat on their backs begging for quarter; they have to be reduced by a more realistic media to half that number. Even so, it may have been caused by the rubber bullets and birdshot used by the police.

A smaller shock, however, this time to the money idiots, came when Mandela went on to declare that all industries, including the gold mines, would be nationalised. How else can black Marxist gangsters find the money they need except through extortion, robbing banks or nationalising white industries? It's a short-term policy, to be sure, but who has ever heard of a black hesitating to kill the goose that lays the golden eggs?

Mandela's speech caused panic on the stock exchange, making it even more of a frantic yo-yo than ever. The euphoria gave way to the jitters on the part of the very people who had most enthusiastically advocated his release. The Cape Times gave expression to it in its unique manner: "wealth distortions created by policies of racial suppression and inequality will have to be addressed." Mandela was quite right about that, and about the need to nationalise banks and industries, but he should not talk about nationalising the gold mines, because "the world at large will not buy an outdated and unworkable economic philosophy any more than it would a discredited ideology of white racial superiority!" In other words, smash the racist whites by all means, but don't knock the world rulers to whom you owe your very existence.

Subtract this from 245 and MIT is left with 60 non-Jewish white male freshmen. How many super-qualified white males were turned down by MIT last year? Maybe 1,000; maybe 5,000.

Alan R. Goodman, a Jewish ambulance chaser, sent a bill for $975,000 to his client, a paraplegic, for finagling an out-of-court settlement of $2,925,000 in an injury case. The judge balked at approving the outrageous attorney's fee. But will he balk for long?

Some 1 million U.S. couples want to adopt a child. But there are only 50,000 American children available. So foreign children -- 10,019 in 1988 -- are being adopted. 7,614 of them were from Asia; only 112 from Europe.

In last year's New York City mayoral election, which black David Dinkins won by a blizzard, 35% of Jews voted for him, as did 23% of Italians and 27% of Irish. This split in the white ranks, though not terribly large, was large enough to defeat Rudolph Giuliani, the white candidate.

In mid-1989, 436,000 black males were enrolled in higher education. 609,600 black males, one-fourth of all the bucks in the 20-29 age group, are in jail or out on probation or parole.

There were 51,000 black-white couples in 1960; 218,000 in 1988. The child of an inter racial marriage has been described by a sociologist as a "150% man" -- 50% of one race, 50% of another, 50% of both. (Orlando Sentinel)

27% of 152 male prostitutes examined in Atlanta had the AIDS virus.

South Koreans in a VCR manufacturing plant near Seoul work 12 hours a day, 7 days a week and have 2 days off a year. Their pay in the mid-80s was $3,000 per annum.

53% of Spaniards believe that those with incurable diseases should be allowed to practice euthanasia. So alleges a study undertaken by the Centro de investigaciones Sociologicas.

In 1952-60, the Bureau of Indian Affairs paid for the relocation of some 33,000 redskins from their reservations to a half-dozen Western and Midwestern cities, where most of them now live in abject poverty.

The IRS collected $935 billion in taxes in 1988. 51% came from personal income taxes, 34% employment taxes, 12% corporate taxes and 1% estate and gift taxes.

Troy Hayden, 16, son of Viet Cong cheerleaders Jane Fonda and Tom Hayden, was arrested in Los Angeles for spray-painting graffiti on a telephone booth and the side of a building.

Among those indicted after a six-year investigation of El Rukin, Chicago's murderous black drug gang, was Jesse Jackson's half-brother, Noah Robinsion, charged with hiring gang members to make a hit. El Rukin, Arabic for "the foundation," started up in the 1960s as a loose-knit collection of black thieves who achieved celebrity status by later pretending to "go straight." When morons in the Nixon administration gave the gang a federal job-training grant, members used the windfall to finance a paramilitary drug operation. After presiding over the collapse of Detroit for the last 16 years, apparent Mayor-for-life Coleman Young lifted media eyebrows for his dealings with Kenneth Weiner, suspected of diverting $13 million of city money into dummy corporations he controlled. Young is the proprietor of a consulting firm, Detroit Technology, whose only known employee is Weiner. The Mayor recently announced a future layoff of 500 policemen, even though he himself continues to be protected by 25 around-the-clock Uzi-toting police bodyguards and $139,000 worth of city-paid high-tech security gear at his mansion on one of the few safe blocks left in Detroit.

New York criminals of uncertain racial background are using vans to commit drive-by purse snatchings. A 74-year-old Brooklyn woman was recently dragged 70 feet after two men in a van pulled alongside her, grabbed her purse and slammed the door on her hand. Another victim, a 60-year-old grandmother, died from massive head injuries when she was run over on Park Avenue by a speeding van as an Hispanic driver grabbed her purse.

Arts and letters by another Chosenite, Culture for creating more than $1.3 billion in fraudulent losses and interest expenses for his clients, a major defense contractor, pleaded guilty in December to fraudulent losses and obtaining sensitive information from defense contracts. Chairman and CEO Bernard L. Schwartz said it was all a "regrettable incident."

An unidentified 15-year-old girl testified last December that she was raped in a hotel room by three crew members of black rap singer LL Cool J.

A U.S. District Court ruled that Eddie Antar, of the electronics firm, Crazy Eddie, Inc., was "the head of a scheme" to overstate the company's income so he could benefit from resulting higher stock prices when he unloaded his own shares. A judge ordered the sleaze merchant, now on the lam, to repatriate the $52 million he transferred to bank accounts in Israel.

Gary Cohen, 49, a Suffolk County (NY) pediatrician, was arraigned on 75 counts of sexually abusing boys under his care. The pediatric pedophile advised single mothers that their sons were in need of male companionship and offered his home as a weekend gathering place.

Here come de judge! For evading taxes and using cocaine, William "Teddy" Martin was sentenced to nine months in prison following damaging testimony from a friend, black actor Charles Barnett, who played Noogie Lamont on TV's Miami Vice show. According to Barnett, he and the black Zoo City judge, who resigned from the bench just prior to his indictment, snorted the white stuff two or three times a week.

After raping his 13-year-old daughter four times, Eladio Mendez was sentenced in 1986 to four consecutive seven-year terms. Then, in a typical bureaucratic foul-up, he was mistakenly released in 1988. Mendez then proceeded to file a motion to set aside his conviction. When the judge realized the request was sent not from prison but from Mendez's home, he had him promptly re-arrested and returned to the lockup.

Rev. J. Robert Williams, 34, a faggy Episcopalian priest from Hoboken (NJ), told a church forum in Detroit that monogamy is "unnatural as celibacy." Fidelity, he sermonized, is not required for marriage. Pussyfooting Episcopal Bishop John S. Spong whimpered that the priest's resignation "might be requested."

In Birmingham (AL), five-month-old Brittany Franklin died of starvation while her parents, Doris Franklin and Eddie James Amous, were out partying and drinking for two days.

Hector Frazier, son of former heavyweight boxing champ Joe Frazier, was charged with knocking a 10-year-old boy off his bicycle and robbing him of $3 and the bike. Tough-guy Hector is 27.

Zoo City's former chief keeper, Ed Koch, said he would spend most of his $1.2 million campaign surplus on what he called a memorial to racial harmony. Instead, he has squandered much of the cash on farewell parties, reception-banquets and job-placement services for his underlings. "I don't think there's going to be much left over," said Koch's campaign treasurer.

Subway self-defense expert Bernhard Goetz, acting as his own lawyer, filed suit against shysters William Kunstler and Ronald Kuby for $40 million. Goetz alleges they called him "a walking time bomb and a racist."

In Kingston, Jamaica, during her trial last December on charges of cocaine possession, entertainer-actress Grace Jones, the black amazon, blamed her husband's ex-lover for planting the white stuff in her house. Jones, her husband and the husband's paramour had been sharing the same house at the time of the arrest.

A white missionary couple, Dan and Kathy Blackburn of Indiana, are petitioning to adopt 28 Haitian children, most of whom were abandoned as babies and raised by the Blackdowns when they were preaching the gospel in Haiti. The couple's faith in racial equality wasn't dimmed a bit after a neighboring missionary was chopped into pieces with a machete.

Respiratory therapist Rodney F. Wright, 11, was recently indicted on charges of rape and sexual abuse. The black Oregonian allegedly violated a patient confined to a hospital bed.

According to a spokeswoman for the Census Book of World Records, a black woman from Louisville became the world's youngest great-grandmother at the tender age of 44.

Charles Spatz, Mark Gwenter, Steven Magier, Eric Schwartz, Neil Beitch, Gary Fischman and Lloyd Kahn are Zoo City-area podiatrists who have been indicted on charges of Medicaid fraud. The state's special prosecutor said the group allegedly stole thousands from Medicaid by billing for high-priced foot braces while giving their patients "cheap stock goods."

Canada. Stephen Sander is a Pakistani who moved to Vancouver in the mid-1960s and now controls 23 apartment buildings with 1,800 units. Worth $170 million, Sander has created something called the Consciousness International Foundation which will begin recycling much of his company's profits to needy Third Worlders. A Sander tenant named Trish Waddell just saw the monthly rent on her one-bedroom apartment leap from $425 to $575. "I'm outraged," she says. "It's hypocritical. Charity begins at home."

That, no doubt, is precisely what the swarthy Sander thinks. Speaking of charity beginning at home, Waddell should be asked if she has ever donated one devalued Canadian dollar to any of her nation's struggling immigration-control groups.

In defense of his gouging ways, Sander once told a reporter. "We are a good landlord. We are a generous landlord. We are a kind landlord." He now says that land in Vancouver will soon command the same rents as downtown Manhattan, but fails to add that the populace will soon resemble Manhattan's as well.

Public school buildings in Red Deer, Alberta, are being plastered with lavish Holocaust posters, courtesy of the Simon Wiesenthal Center. Sol Littman, who's behind the defacement, says Red Deer is being targeted because revisionist James Keegstra once taught in a nearby town. English teacher Darren Lund declines to accept this unflattering explanation. My students have been "working to promote tolerance" for three years, says Lund, and "I really think [Littman is] rewarding us for our efforts."

Lund, whose group has been raising money to sponsor a foster child and to hold smarmy poetry readings, says proudly, "It's quite right to rate human or racial ecology as highly as the 'green' kind. Auberon Waugh addressed the issue in an article called "How the blonds swap babies for toads" (The Spectator, Dec. 16, 1989). One of Waugh's favorite personal correspondents, D.R. Reid of Sydenham, South London, is a naturalist who frequents the Crystal Palace McDonald's, an eatery employing blacks from the following African tribes: Luo, Kikuyu, Ibibio, Yoruba, Fanti, Ijaw, Mende and Ashanti. Reid points out that "he has never met an African who was remotely concerned about the extinction of a species."

Waugh continues:

"Only the white races are remotely interested in the subject [of extinction], hysterically inventor more and more species which require their officious concern. Mr. Reid sees an unconscious motivation in all this, arising from a suppressed awareness that whatever may be happening to the okapi or extraordinary Majorcan toad, it is the blond, blue-eyed white races of Europe -- what he calls the Nordic sub-race -- which, through its inability to breed at replacement level and its propensity to intermarry with the dominant genes of the dark-haired, brown-eyed south, faces extinction within little over a hundred years."

Reid had been moved by the spectacle of Nordic tourists discovering a "new" species of toad on the Mediterranean island of Majorca as recently as 1981, and promptly making vast efforts to protect something which "had been living on that crowded island for many thousands of years unobserved."

Instauration once called attention to young Germans poking about in distant corners of the world in an attempt to rescue endangered bats, bugs, ferns and corals. It's all very noble, but, as Waugh suggests, "a united Germany of 80 million citizens represents very little threat to anybody."

Thanks to its genocidal birthrate, it "will soon be a small nation of mumbling geriatrics." Waugh's advice: "We should encourage the younger generation [of Nordics] to take less interest in extraordinary Majorcan toads, more in having babies."

What the future will hold if Thatcher lets hundreds of thousands of Hong Kong Chinese flood into Britain can be glimpsed in the East London borough of Hackney. When Carole Wooding impatiently demanded a public "council house" after three years on the waiting list, she was told that nothing was available because she wasn't a Turkish Kurd. Hackney tenants were likewise informed that they could not have their central heating fixed unless they were Kurds. A spokesman for the Labour-controlled council said, "Blame the government," whose soft-hearted directives at Heathrow Airport were fueling the "refugee crisis."

Andrew Knight made a splash in January by switching abruptly from Chief Executive of Conrad Black's Telegraph group of newspapers to Executive Chairman of News International, Rupert Murdoch's vast media conglomerate, which includes the London Times and Sky Television. Considered a weak personality with few strong convictions, Knight "delivers" in one department: finding managers who can turn red bottom lines black. Another point in Knight's favor is his wife: Begum Sabiba Ruman Malik, a Pakistani, who has borne him two daughters.

Spain. The highest Spanish court has thrown out the lawsuit against 84-year-old Leon Degrelle, the onetime Belgian fascist leader, brought by "survivor" Violeta Friedmann, for casting doubt on the Holocaust. Degrelle, who fought alongside the Germans in some of the goriest battles of WWII, managed to escape the Nuremberg show trials, the hangman's noose and Jewish vengeance by flying to Spain in 1945. He was severely injured when his plane crashed-landed on a beach near San Sebastian.

The Spanish court said the Holocaust is history and people have a fundamental right to have opinions about history. Degrelle's statements, ruled the judges, did not attack the honor of any person or group. Friedmann was ordered to pay all the legal expenses, including the cost of Degrelle's lawyer.

France. They just can't leave Jean-Marie Le Pen alone. They lifted his immunity as a member of the European Parliament once for making a Holocaust-alluding pun on the name of French cabinet minister Michel Duraffour ("Duraffour crématoire"). Four in French is "oven" -- get it? Now they lifted it a second time after he stated that international Jewry, along with Freemasons and Trilateralists, play a powerful role in world affairs.

Normally European Parliamentarians are allowed the privilege of speaking their minds without fear of prosecution from their home governments. If Le Pen had criticized Arabs or South Africans, he would have been cheered instead of jeered. But that's the way things go these days, not just in the European Parliament, but just about everywhere in the West. One group, the Jews, is permitted to keep cranking up its sleazy Hollywood and TV filth machines -- to demolish profitable American companies with inside trading and junk bonds, to shoot down Palestinian kids armed with slingshots, to stir up minorities against majorities whenever possible, to sneak back into de-communized Eastern European governments -- and whoever dares to utter a syllable of criticism faces charges of anti-Semitism.

Now that Le Pen is once again fair game for Jewish racists, the French government has announced that he will be prosecuted for "insulting a minister" and for incitement to racial hatred.

Another French professor has joined the growing number of Holocaust disbelievers. Bernard Notin, a professor of economics at the University of Jean-Moulin, otherwise known as Lyon III (part of the same university complex that kicked out Professor Faurisson in 1985 for denying the existence of gas chambers), has been suspended from teaching until further notice.

Notin was charged with "deviations which lead to racism and revisionism" the day after the Union of Jewish Students demanded he be fired.

Germany. The German paper, Die Welt (Sept. 9, 1989), came out with this interesting snippet. Back in 1934, Albert Einstein was asked to lend his name to a protest against the mass murders Stalin had ordered to avenge the assassination of Lenigrad Communist boss Sergei Kirov (whose death Uncle Joe himself has been accused of arranging). Einstein declined, saying that such a protest would only aid "the Japanese aggressor." Besides, he added, the goal of the Soviet system was the betterment of the living conditions of the Russian people. For this reason, why was it necessary to direct the attention of the public to faults of the regime?

Right-wing politician Erich Gutjahr, 78, was fined 6,000 marks ($3,600) by a Frankfurter judge for remarking to a female reporter in May of last year, "It must be acknowledged that Jews are once again plundering the country." His offense, in West German legalese, was "Volksverhetzung und Beleidigung" (racial incitement and libel). Gutjahr denied he had ever said such a thing. He also denied calling West German President von Weizsacker a "größten Lump" (great scoundrel), denied arguing about Holocaust numbers and denied correlating "Umweltverschmutzung" (environmental pollution) with the influx of Ausländer (foreigners). Believe it or not, Gutjahr's prosecutor was a Frau with the exotic name of Helga Goy-Fink!

Gerd Honsik, a Viennese author, was fined 54,000 marks ($32,400) by a Munich judge for his self-published book, Apologie for Hitler? 36 Unheard Witnesses Against the Gas Chambers. Found guilty of insulting the memory of the dead, Honsik is appealing.

Hungary. One of the biggest Consyps in Europe, says the gossip British publication, Private Eye, is back in power in the lands where the Reds are supposed to have fallen. From his British base of operations, Robert Maxwell, the Czech-Jewish media czar, spent much of the 1980s lauding Moscow's satellites in Eastern Europe. In his role as General Editor of Pergamon Press's series of books on "World Leaders," Maxwell wrote fawning forewords to works about Nicolae Ceausescu, Erich Honecker, and the rest of their club. Today, the London Daily Mirror calls Ceausescu "The Monster" and "The Butcher of Bucharest," but in 1983 the paper's owner was throwing him creampuff questions like, "What has, in your opinion, made you so popular with the Romanians?" At the end of the interview, Maxwell wished the Butcher "good health and power to continue your constant, tireless activity for the good of your country."

In his foreword to the 1985 biography of Hungary's Janos Kadar, Maxwell praised the 1956 invasion as necessary. A 1986 build-up of Czechoslovakia's Gustav Husak featured Maxwell alluding to the 1968 invasion there as one of "the problems of the mid-sixties." And so it went in all the Pergamon books saluting virtually every Marxist dictatorship.

Now that the Reds have lost power in Hungary, or at least changed their coloring, the theory is circulating in Budapest that communism was the Jews' "revenge" on the nation for supporting the Nazis. In January, a popular writer named Istvan Csurka took to the radio to warn Hungarians to maintain their guard because a certain "dwarf minority" was threatening to retake control of the country. Less than a month later, Robert Maxwell and a group of investors purchased Magyar Hirlap, until recently the nation's official newspaper. Maxwell's share of the paper will be 40%, though he promises not to interfere with its contents.

Maxwell calls Hungary "the most exciting place in the world," but admits he's planning to invest in newspapers all over Eastern Europe, including Moscow. On top of that, he expects to launch something resembling an Old World version of USA Today in May. The European will be sold throughout the continent, except, presumably, in Albania. But don't expect any exposures of Maxwell's Ceausescu-hugging, Honecker-kissing past in The European -- or in Magyar Hirlap or any other Maxwell publication.

As "Cap'n Bob" Maxwell becomes the Citizen Kane of Budapest, B'nai B'rith International, having reopened its chapter there after an absence of more than 40 years, has announced that Hungarian education officials have been receptive to BB proposals to revise school curricula on the World War II era. "At the very least," says one B'nai B'rith hyperactivist, "we can bring [the Hungarians] expertise in reducing prejudice."

Czechoslovakia. Now that West Germany is funneling most of its investment to East Germany, the rest of Central and Eastern Europe is turning to the U.S. for econ-
The nations of Eastern Europe are beating a path to [Israel] to re-establish diplomatic relations. Their goal is to use Israel as a bridgehead for winning more trade and investment from the United States. “They are desperate,” says Henry Siegman, executive director of the American Jewish Congress.

“They want Western investment… To get that, they think they need Jewish good will.” Siegman, who has high praise for the new [governments]… says he tried to make the leaders aware of the implied anti-Semitism in their position, which is based on the idea that American Jews can tell Washington where to direct aid and private investment.

Maybe this explains Czech President Vaclav Havel’s odd choice of ambassadors. To Moscow, he will send Rudolf Slansky, 55-year-old son of the Rudolf Slansky, hanged by the Stalinists in 1952 for his Zionist sympathies. Slansky’s fils, who spent World War II in the U.S., where his father was serving openly as an “international Communist functionary,” remained a Communist after his father’s execution. To Washington, Havel will send Jewess Rita Klimova, who likewise spent some of her formative years in the U.S., on New York’s Upper West Side. Klimova’s father, Stanislav Budin, was a leading Communist journalist, and Rita herself was long a “very fanatical” Communist, in her own words. Klimova was once married to Zdenek Mlynar, a prominent Czech apparatuschik who just happened to have been another of Mikhail Gorbachev’s many friends during student days in Moscow.

About 16 million people live in Czechoslovakia. Officially, 13,000 are Jews. The odds against Jews being chosen to head both of Prague’s largest embassies are therefore 1,231-to-1 times 1,231-to-1 or 1,515,000-to-1.

When Havel returned recently to his own former Zoo City haunts after an absence of almost 22 years, he was surrounded by the likes of Joseph Papp, Arthur Miller, Wendy Wasserstein and Mayor Dinkins. Shortly before his trip to the U.S., Havel had lunch in Prague with the aging Yugoslavian-American porn rocker Frank Zappa.

Soviet Union. Provocation, a traditional Soviet art form, has seldom been so provocative. For weeks it was whispered (and shouted) that Pamyat (Memory) was planning to attack Soviet Jews on February 5. The latest gossip has postponed the big pogrom to May 5. Meanwhile, down in Azerbaijan, it is said that doomsday for Jews is June 9. Francis X. Clines, writing in the New York Times (Feb. 2), observed that “as in the past, [the pogrom rumors] bristle with very specific predictions among the nation’s Jews.” While these rumors are circulated abroad, rarely mentioned is the central fact that “in two years of rumors of pogroms [against Jews] there is not a single verified case.” The speaker of that authoritative sentence is Mikhail Chlenov, co-chairman of the Congress of [Soviet] Jewish Organizations, which was established in Moscow in December. “The panic reflects not the danger of today but expectations of tomorrow,” says Chlenov.

The closest thing to a pogrom occurred in Moscow on January 18. Something called the April Committee, a writers’ group with a large Jewish membership, was meeting at the House of Writers when a gang of what the Soviet press described as “hooligans” burst in, threw some punches and shouted “Jews, return to Israel!” They said they were from Pamyat and warned they had only brought bullhorns this time, but would bring clubs on the next visit. By another account, it was microphones this time and submachine guns the next. The head “hooligan,” identifying himself as Smirnov, cried, “Comrade Jews, leave the hall! We’re the masters of the country! The pogrom will come in a few months!” The name Smirnov intrigued those Americans who remembered that the Jewish emigre comedian seen on countless TV commercials calls himself “Yakov Smirnoff.”

A different kind of writers’ meeting, a gathering of Russian nationalists, was held in the same Writers’ Union building in Moscow last November. “Why are Jews everywhere?” asked Anatoly Biylov. “Yes, they are clever, but why have they led us into this dead end?” A commentator for U.S. News and World Report (Feb. 5) unhelpfully explained, “The dead end is communism itself—and, astonishingly, many of the nationalists now blame the Jews for leading the nation into it.”

All the rumors and apparent provocations began to make more sense in mid-February, when the Moscow prosecutor’s office announced that it was launching a criminal investigation of Pamyat for “inciting national and racial hatred and strike” with its campaign to “de-Zionize” the country. A prominent Soviet playwright visiting the U.S. must have been happy to hear the news. Alexander Buravsky had just recently told the Los Angeles Times (Feb. 3), “We shouldn’t wait for a fire. We should try to prevent it, if you can smell the smoke.” He was particularly angry because last autumn, Pamyat had been allowed to hold a demonstration in Red Square, a very restricted and prestigious place.

Instauration has a hunch that a scheme to bring down Pamyat might go something like this. (1) Sprinkle around a few bribes and get Pamyat members into Red Square and a few other high-profile landmarks. The money required could be easily arranged, as there are presently up to 30,000 millionaires (U.S. dollars) in the USSR, according to Komsomolskaya Pravda (Jan. 7). (2) Have Pamyat behave outrageously, as in the “Smirnov” incident. (3) Publicize a juxtaposition of 1 and 2, especially in the U.S., and bring enormous pressures against Gorbachev and his circle to get Pamyat banned.

Western racial nationalists should heed what happened in Moscow on February 23. A rally of hardline Communists was held, at which the star attraction was a feisty little chemistry teacher from Leningrad named Nina A. Andreyeva. Described as “a fiercely proud Communist,” Andreyeva nevertheless told her audience, “The most important thing is that a person should care about Russia, that Russia should be for him concern number 1.” Outside the rally, the parking lot resembled a nationalist trade fair with people hawking postcards of the czars and leaflets bemoaning the Jewish subversion of Mother Russia.

This proves once again that in Russia, unlike in Eastern Europe, there are millions of people who combine a sincere if misguided communism with fervent patriotism. Three other combinations also exist: the international Communists (Jewish Trotskyists), the national anti-Communists like Solzhenitsyn, and the anti-national anti-Communists (the Soviet equivalent of America’s “neoconservatives”).

Anyone wishing to promote the interests of the white race, specifically its Russian branch, would seek to unite the two huge nationalist groupings and persuade them to overlook their “merely ideological” differences. That this is precisely what’s happening was suggested by Vladimir Voinovich, writing in the New York Times (Dec. 11, 1989):

> The country is coming apart at the seams. There is no meat, soap has vanished, sugar is rationed. But more and more people are becoming involved with the Jewish question, not the production of goods.

As grave as the Soviet economic crisis may be, it seems the people are more concerned with national and ethnic affairs than with food. As someone who tangled with rabbis 2,000 years ago said, “Man does not live by bread alone.” Columnist Flora Lewis warned in the New York Times (Feb. 27):

As much as three years ago, Jews in Moscow told me of signs of renewed persecutions. Gorbachev reformers warned of a coalition of Communist hardliners and anti-Communist nationalists excluding the mystical “purity” of Mother Russia.

Flora Lewis, recognizing only too well that a coming-together of the Russians would make the mediator class superfluous, could only sputter about the obvious parallels with German National Socialism.

In 1944, Stalin expelled Meskhet Turks from his native Christian Georgia to distant Moslem Uzbekistan. But the Meskhet are Shite Moslems, while the Uzbek majority is Sunni Moslem. In June 1989, after a fight had erupted between the two groups in a bazaar, the streets were strewn with 100 dead, mostly Meskets. The dusky Georgians, described by Insight magazine as an “exceedingly emotional” group, made it plain that they would not take the Meskets back after 45 years. And so began a massive airlift of this Turkish tribe -- from Moslem Uzbekistan to a new home in the Russian motherland!

Demographic implosion means that not only do the French leave Algeria, but the Algerians enter France; not only do the British exit India, but Asian Indians invade Britain. Russia is not immune from this global white collapse. What is needed everywhere are white leaders who can fully grasp what is going on, and lock the doors to their homelands while there is still time.

The estimated 3,800 Jews living in Syria include 3,000 in Damascus and 700 in two other cities. Nearly all would prefer living in Israel, but the Syrians like to keep them around as “bomb insurance.” Now, a few Syrian Jews, mostly spinsters in search of husbands, will be let out in a bid to get Washington to lift its economic sanctions.

The paeans of the international press made it hard to get a handle on Mandela’s résumé. The essential facts are that he was arrested in December 1956, with 153 other anti-apartheid activists, and was acquitted five years later. He then went underground, as leader of Spear of the Nation, the military wing of both the African National Congress (ANC) and the South African Communist Party (SACP), to launch a series of brutal bombings of power plants, railways and other targets. Convicted of sabotage and treason, he was sentenced to life in prison in June 1964.

The Western media prepared their captive audience for a “new Mandela” who would act as a “moderating force” on a polarized South Africa -- sort of a black de Klerk. But within hours of his release, Mandela’s first speech made it plain that he still had revolution and mayhem on his mind. He insisted that the only party to which he belongs is the ANC, which it so happens still has at least 25 professed Communists on its 35-member National Executive Committee, and then went on to salute the South African Communist Party for “its sterling contribution to the struggle for democracy,” and its Lithuanian-Jewish General Secretary, Joe Slovo, as “one of our finest patriots.”

The SACP held its Seventh Congress in Cuba last June, where the bearded maximum leader apparently tipped off his guests about the growing dangers of Gorbyism. At any rate, during the following months, Comrade Slovo suddenly trimmed his sail and began moaning about the horrible excesses of Stalinism, which he regretted never having recognized earlier in his long career. Slovo’s new party line -- new to him, that is -- is that “true Marxism” has never really been tried anywhere, only “distorted socialism.” Whatever makes him imagine that the true faith will finally take hold in a land populated by benighted, mutually hostile black tribes that have only recently come down from the trees?

“Cooperation between the ANC and SACP goes back to the early 1920s,” noted Mandela in a published manifesto. Those ANC members who tried in the past to have the Communists expelled “were themselves expelled,” he cautioned. Incidentally, when “the conscience of the world” (as a Cable News Network reporter called him) was arrested in the early 1960s, he was in possession of a 23-page document written in his own hand and entitled “How to Be a Good Communist.”

Yet Nelson is a lamb compared to wife Winne. In a famous 1986 speech, she supported the seizure and immobilation (neck-lacing) of suspected police informants in the black townships. Later, her thugs killed Mandela United Football Club murderer a black teenager.

On Nelson's triumphant 40-mile ride from prison into Cape Town, thousands of cheering whites allegedly lined the highways. Some carried signs, "Mandela. Our Leader." On February 11, twenty white students from the University of the Witwatersrand showed up outside Mandela's home in Soweto and insisted on doing a "toyi-toyi" dance for him. That's the terpsichorean jerks that young blacks are doing all over South Africa these days. Call it the dance of death for the White Tip.

The South African Jewish Board of Deputies estimates that 10,000 Jews have left the country during the past two years, with about 2,000 each going to Australia, Britain, Canada, Israel and the United States. Virtually none hazarded the non-English-speaking, non-Zionist world. Among the 2,000 who chose Israel, about half are expected to give up in disgust and return to South Africa's "racist caldron." Many of the others will probably drift from Israel to the U.S.

New Zealand. As Vancouver, Canada, is being overrun by the "monster houses" of Chinese immigrants (Elsewhere, Sept. 1988 and Mar. 1989), another ugly type of architecture is blighting New Zealand: gang fortresses. A reporter for The Weekend Australian (Dec. 2-3, 1989) described the Maori gangs and their very un-English ways:

Fortified houses are integral to gang life: 1.8m-high corrugated iron fences and high gates topped with barbed wire patrolled by dobermans or bull terriers can be seen in downtown Wellington or suburban Christchurch.

They are perfect bolt-holes for gang members fleeing police or traffic officers, and police complain that even with a search warrant they cannot immediately, or easily, enter a gang fortress.

Until recently, New Zealand was famous for high tea, lovely accents, cricket and scrumptious, outdoor living. Then the whites stopped having kids, the Maoris went on reproducing, and the country was invaded by South Sea Islanders in search of dollar money. Now this land of 3.5 million, still 80% white (increasingly old white), has more than 6,000 dedicated gangsters, led by the Mongrel Mob and Black Power. The wimpish liberals will "grasp at anything that shows a human side to the feared Mongrels," said The Weekend Australian.

In 1984, a Mob member was stunned by a judge who ruled he should be kept out of prison because of his leadership qualities . . . .

In 1985, the Kapiti Coast Mongrel Mob . . . was given a $21,000 grant and an interest-free loan by the Government to set up a horticultural . . . operation . . . . A photo of a Mongrel Mobster with a shaving cream beard entertaining children became a Christmas favourite.

White New Zealanders have always prided themselves on not exterminating the Maoris, as the Australians came close to doing to the Abos. They try very hard to believe that Maoris are coconuts -- brown on the outside, but proper Englishmen within. But reality keeps intruding, as it did at a conclave of Maori gangs in Auckland in December 1988.

The beer ran out on Saturday. Bored, kilometres from the city centre, drunk, stoned and mean, they turned to other entertainment.

[A] young woman [race unspecified] was held captive at the site and raped repeatedly by at least 20 men for nine hours. She was assaulted, doused with petrol, urinated on.

Chauvinism within the Mob is a way of life, and at the subsequent trial a defendant said gang rapes were common.

Now the Mongrel Mob has opened a branch in Perth, Australia, and gang warfare is spilling onto the city's streets. The Australians -- that allegedly rowdy, working-class breed descended from a heady mixture of good and bad elements of the Nordic race -- are reported to be deeply shocked by what the gentile New Zealanders has become "just an everyday occurrence."

Australia. Queensland is becoming this country's Quebec, as an independence movement slowly takes root. Conservatives in the tropical north are fed up with Canberra's gun-grabbing, immigrant-coddling ways. Another threat is posed by Indonesia, with its 200 million people, most of whom are Mongoloid-Australoid hybrids. Some Indonesians are already using maps which show a "Greater Indonesia" embracing Australia down to the Tropic of Capricorn (i.e., half of Queensland).

Judge Athol Moffitt was a prosecutor in the war crimes trials at Labuan Island, North Borneo (now Malaysia) in 1945. He has now written a book called Project Kingfisher about the aborted effort to rescue 1,500 surviving prisoners from the Japanese POW camp at nearby Sandakan. Two thousand Australians were taken there (along with 750 British troops), and only a few lived to tell about it. The chief causes of death were starvation and disease caused by overwork and harsh conditions.

Reviewer William Noonan notes that Moffitt explores with care the differences in ethics between those raised under Judeo-Christian teachings on the sanctity of human life and the absence of such inhibiting influences in the Japanese culture up to and during World War II.

Those unconvinced by that argument may at least appreciate Moffitt's observation that prosecuting war criminals was already an arduous task in late 1945, and is an absurd enterprise in 1990.

If the Nordic race finally dies because it has no territory left to call its own, a large part of the blame will fall on a rather small number of racial renegades like Donald Horne. In January 1989, the island continent acknowledged the 25th anniversary of Horne's extremely influential book, The Lucky Country, whose title became a national slogan. When it appeared in 1964, there was still good reason to hope that the longstanding "White Australia" policy could last forever.

All that was needed to shore up "White Australia" was one articulate Australian able to take a world-historical view of the race problem, perceive that the existence of a "Nordic reservation" or two in an overwhelmingly non-Nordic world was simple justice, and patiently point this out to a people who would have lapped it up. Instead, at the critical juncture, along came a rambling book whose ridicule of "stuffy," "anglocentric," "racist," "philistine" Australia was regarded as "bold" and "forward-looking" by the lightweight trendyites. Horne's tract now stands exposed as what it always was: a series of swift kicks to a dying man.

Horne struck his first blow in 1961, on assuming the editorship of an influential journal called The Bulletin. Its masthead still read "Australia for the White Man," and Horne's first act was to have it removed. Since he would undoubtedly also oppose such a slogan for a journal in Canada, Scandinavia or anywhere else, Horne was really saying, "No Place for the White Man."

His fans call Horne a "maverick intellectual" whose feet are "naked racists." Instauration calls Horne a cog in the Genocide Machine -- genocide of whites, that is.

Ponderable Quote

It is true that God's children in Africa suffer because there is less freedom in their countries than during the colonial times.

Voting Against America's Black Royalty

Political pundits who inquire if Communists can be freely elected anywhere in Eastern Europe should also ask if initiatives honoring the Rev. Dr. St. Martin Luther King Jr. could obtain a popular majority anywhere in the U.S. beyond the ghetto walls.

Almost every state in the union has a King holiday, and almost every large city has a King Boulevard or King Civic Center. Yet the electoral evidence suggests that Americans will almost always vote down honors for King when given half a chance.

Portland (OR) has been in an uproar since April 1989, when its City Council voted unanimously to rename Union Avenue to honor King, but the old name was restored in 1987 by some Portland businessmen who are almost hysterical about what the vote will supposedly do to the city’s “image,” especially if the lib-min network — America’s state within a state — subjects Portland to a boycott like the one endured by Arizona while it opposed a King holiday.

San Diego’s City Council dictatorially changed that city’s Market Street to honor King, but the old name was restored in 1987 by an overwhelming popular mandate. San Diegans apparently suffered no fate worse than a few black protests. Anchorage (AK) more recently backed out of naming a building for King, and there, too, the repercussions were few.

In Arizona, however, the populist Governor Evan Mecham was impeached by liberal legislators in no small part because he rescinded the King holiday created by an executive order of his predecessor, Bruce Babbitt. Mecham’s removal brought the un-elected liberal Rose Mofford to power, and she sneaked a King holiday bill through a special session of the legislature last September. Conservatives immediately launched a petition drive to have the issue placed before the state’s voters this November. All indications are that the King holiday bill will be rejected by about 2-to-1.

Leading the pro-King forces in Arizona are the usual white businessmen who want to end the “image problems” (i.e., the boycott) of their state and have therefore staged Martin Luther King Jr. “prayer breakfasts” to show their pious devotion to the greenback. Anti-King activist Julian Sanders is contemptuous of such attitudes, saying, “If we don’t have a majority in this state that wants to honor Martin Luther King for what he was as a man, then the whole [holiday] thing is a fraud and a sham.”

Carolyn Walker, the only black in the Arizona Senate, understands better than anyone the importance of next autumn’s vote: “Should Arizona rescind the King holiday, this will simply be the first state to put that issue on the ballot. Then it will go like dominoes.”

If democracy can topple statues of Lenin and Marx across Eastern Europe, why not statues of Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. in the US of A?

Another additional reason for decrowning our indigenous black royalty emerged in the pages of the London Sunday Telegraph last December. The columnist who calls himself “Mandrake” revealed that King plagiarized his doctoral thesis at Boston University in the early 1950s. It seems he leaned a bit too heavily on the writings of a white fellow student named Jack Boozer, recently deceased, without giving him more than a footnote. A team of scholars at Emory University in Atlanta, who plan to compile and publish King’s papers in 12 volumes, has apparently uncovered the damning evidence but is sitting on it for as long as possible.

The power of the King cult was demonstrated anew in Buffalo (NY) last King Day, when the Goldome Bank there remained open when all other banks were closed — just as Goldome also does on Columbus Day, Veterans Day, Presidents Day, and Saturdays. “It borders on sacrilege,” cried a leading local minister. A bank spokeswoman said that King would be honored by showing videotapes of his life at several branches and contributing $5,000 to the money-soaked United Negro College Fund. The Buffalo NAACP was not appeased and sent around the usual picketers.

King Day is more popular today than King Honecker was with the East German Majority a year ago. Both men have enjoyed the hugely inflated status and which comes with elitist boosters and a lack of direct democracy. We can rest assured that the King holidays and monuments will indeed topple like dominoes if glasnost ever comes to America.

A Spontaneous Pan-European Powwow

Up in the wilds of British Columbia, Mother Nature thoughtfully arranged a dozen finger lakes to form an enormous square. The result is called Bowron Lake Provincial Park. Last summer, an Idaho Instaurationist made the 78-mile circuit by canoeing and portaging. He pulled in plenty of trout and each night, around the campfire, talked to young nature lovers of both sexes from Canada, England, Sweden, Germany and Switzerland. Let our friend tell it:

The first topic of conversation was the influx of Asians into Canada, especially Vancouver, and how they are driving the white people out of the area by taking over the various businesses and refusing to hire white males. Several women actually cried and wished that the Asians would go home and “give us back our country.” The boys from Switzerland were friendly but smug in reporting that their country allows no immigration. (Fact is, Switzerland is full of immigrants, but they have a devil of a time obtaining citizenship.)

Having broken his glasses, our friend drove to the nearest town. There, the newspaper’s lead story told of a campaign by Maoris to appeal to Asian countries for help, and some whites were indeed fleeing to Australia.

Incidentally, a group of three canoes bearing six Orientals came through our area. There was no mixing — no conversations or friendliness. They stayed in their assigned area and we stayed in ours.

While heeding the call of the wild, these North Woods ramblers also listened to the call of their genes.

Lighting Up the Border

Will San Diego be America’s Leipzig? Each week, white Californians have been gathering along the Mexican border and turning their auto headlights toward Tijuana, to illuminate all those huddled masses yearning to conquer Gringoland. On Friday night, March 16, more than 1,000 people in some 400 vehicles gathered for what they call “Light Up the Border.” A Los Angeles Times reporter noted that everyone appeared to be “non-Latino.”

“Is this pure racism,” cried Juan Gonzalez, a resident of San Ysidro (CA), who responded by playing loud Mexican music on his car radio.

If weekly crowds can make a hated wall tumble, maybe they can cause a desired wall to arise.
Louisiana’s Assurgent Assemblyman

These days, David Duke is singing, “Up, up and away, in my beautiful balloon.” A poll conducted recently by Channel 2 television in Baton Rouge showed 62% favoring State Rep. Duke and only 23% backing U.S. Sen. J. Bennett Johnston. Another TV poll found 294 voters for Duke, 25 for Johnston, and 16 for others or undecided.

The Shreveport Journal phoned 494 registered voters in that part of the state between March 2 and 8. The random calls uncovered only 32% behind Johnston, though the Democratic incumbent is a Shreveport native.

Duke claimed 26%, State Sen. Ben Bagert, who has the state Republican Party’s official blessing, received 17%, and the remaining 25% were either undecided or still too timid to confess their allegiance to Duke.

As recently as last summer, a poll conducted by Sen. Johnston suggested that Duke, then unannounced, would take only 13 to 14% of the statewide vote. Duke’s own pollsters, in February, showed him receiving 30% statewide in the first round.

The open primary for the U.S. Senate seat will be held on October 6. Duke’s goal is to hold Johnston initially to less than 50%. The two leading vote-getters, regardless of party, would then face a run-off on November 6.

Another sign of blossoming support for Duke is the huge crowds he has attracted of late in towns large and small across Louisiana. Jeff Giles, a conservative Jewish businessman who is running for the chairmanship of the state Republican party, told the New Orleans Time-Picayune (Mar. 10): “You have a guy here who is exciting voters, who is registering voters. He gets 250 people out in a little town while we can’t get 20 people out for our endorsed candidates.”

This groundswell of enthusiasm recently prevented the Louisiana Republican Party from formally censuring Duke -- the third time so far it has protected him. The Party had to settle for hearing the New Orleans Time-Picayune (Mar. 10): “You have a guy here who is exciting voters, who is registering voters. He gets 250 people out in a little town while we can’t get 20 people out for our endorsed candidates.”

While populism was busting out all over Huey Long’s old satrapy, Sen. Johnston was a thousand miles away, Duke-baiting a small Jewish audience in Washington. The occasion was the annual meeting of the Hudson Valley Political Action Committee, one of the many pro-Israel PACs that darken the land. Johnston’s topic was Duke’s latest “anti-Semitic” remarks.

Dr. Pat Cures Jewish Fantasies

Patrick Buchanan sounds more like a Holocaust revisionist every day. His March 17 column was about John Demjanjuk, and the new evidence which proves the man’s innocence more clear-ly than ever. Buchanan told of a Treblinka “survivor” named Finkelstein who claimed that “Ivan the Terrible” used a drill to bore into his rectum, though, strangely, he never mentioned the incident in his 1945 sworn testimony. Of this and other inconsistencies, Buchanan asked,

Is this collective perjury? No, something else. Since the war, 1,600 medical papers have been written on “The Psychological and Medical Effects of the Concentration Camps on Holocaust Survivors.”

The so-called “Holocaust Survivor Syndrome” involves “group fantasies of martyrdom and heroics.” Reportedly, half the 20,000 survivor testimonies in Yad Vashem memorial in Jerusalem are considered “unreliable,” not to be used in trials.

“Holocaust Survivor Syndrome,” or HSS, formerly known to only a few medical and revisionist cognoscenti, will now be the stuff of arguments at Joe’s Grill in Hoboken.

If that weren’t enough, Buchanan proceeded directly to the problem of Diesel engines, the alleged death weapon at Treblinka -- and at several other Nazi camps, though he refrained from spelling out the full implications of what he was saying. New Jersey engineer Fritz Berg has said it a thousand times: Diesel engines, while generating lots of smoke and stink, do not emit enough carbon monoxide to kill. It was nice to hear Pat Buchanan saying it for a change, and concluding: “God help us. We are the Salem judges of our own time.”

Standing Up to the Packs of Pro-Israel PACs

Marvin Hier, the pint-sized rabbi from the Simon Wiesenthal Center, was in Washington in March, warning the Democratic and Republican leadership to toe the mark. Jesse Jackson “is considered to be an enemy of Israel,” said Hier. As for George Bush, he inherited the Jewish goodwill for Reagan, but “there are great concerns in the Jewish community. We’re watching Bush and I’M NOT RABBIS! Baker very carefully.”

Jews began feeling queasy in January, when Senate Minority Leader Robert Dole proposed cutting aid to Israel and four other major recipients by 5% and diverting the savings to Eastern Europe, especially after the senator from Kansas told the press: “He [Bush] appreciated it... I assume he must’ve agreed with it.”

There was widespread speculation that Dole had, in fact, sent up a “trial balloon” for the Bush administration.

It soon came to light that the U.S. Embassy in Tel Aviv had advised a month earlier that Israel did not really need all the aid it was receiving. A cable to the State Department, signed by Ambassador William Brown, stated that aid levels to Israel were motivated by political rather than economic considerations. “It’s a political aid program,” said one embassy official.

The New York Times (Jan. 17) promptly ridiculed Senator Dole for trying to milk “a miniature cow.” That was bull, considering that a country like Jamaica has seen its aid slashed from $73 million to $48 million this year alone. Under the Gramm-Rudman budget cuts, $60 million was temporarily withheld from Israel, but every penny was eventually sneaked back in. Jamaica is a real "miniature cow," especially when one considers that its boosters Jews, at which an important publisher said, "I believe that when The Washington Times went off the deep end (Jan. 18, 1990, page S-A-8) when it reported, "More than 4,000 pro-Israel PACs are registered with the FEC..."

Leaders of the Congressional Black Caucus have noted that it's not only black Caribbean nations which are feeling the budget squeeze. Black Africans receive barely $1 in American aid annually per capita, against Israel's $1,000 or more. Political scientist Seymour Martin Lipset, recognizing how blacks are chafing, launched an exercise in damage control in the New York Times (Mar. 9), addressing all those blacks who may wonder "what the [Jewish] fuss is about."

"The answer is simple," said Lipset. America's Jews may be rich and over-represented in Congress and the media, but they are also "full of foreboding. They wait to be struck down. They do not trust gentle neighbors and colleagues. They live under a permanent cloud." Lipset recalled a recent gathering of prominent New York Jews, at which an important publisher said, "I believe that when gentiles go home at night, they dream of killing Jews." Everyone was apparently about to agree when Lipset bravely suggested that it just wasn't so.

The top and bottom line: Jews need a thousand times as much aid because they are a thousand times as scared and distrustful as anyone else.

Columnist Max Lerner spoke similarly tearful words when he recently accused Bush of deciding to "play hardball with a fragile china shop -- picking on all those fragile, miniature cows!" Jewish "blood pressure is rising," warned Seymour Reich, the chairman of the Conference of Presidents of Major American Jewish Organizations. Particularly unwelcome were Bush's remarks of March 3, when he noted that Washington opposes "Israeli settlements in East Jerusalem." The New York Post called this a policy of "ghettoization" which Jews find "profoundly offensive." Jewish settlements on the occupied West Bank may be debatable, but they offer "no parallel" to the situation in Jerusalem, which must remain united under the Israeli flag.

It is expected that aid to Israel will actually rise again this year, by a billion dollars if Senator Daniel Inouye (D-HI) has his way. Even so, a few voices of reason are echoing across the land.

Poles Versus Jews

Alan M. Dershowitz, the Harvard law professor who, on November 24, helped Rabbi Avraham Weiss of the Bronx, the well-known fence-climber of the Carmelite convent at Auschwitz, sue Poland's Cardinal Josef Glemp for "slander," overreached himself four days later. He sent a form letter to all those who had advertised in the 1988 Christmas issue of the Post Eagle, a large Polish-American weekly, sternly advising them not to do it again in 1989. "When you submitted your ad," wrote Dershowitz, "I'm sure you did not realize that it would appear alongside an ad from the Ku Klux Klan, wishing 'all Polonia a merry White Christmas,' and illustrating that racist wish with a drawing of Santa Claus wearing a Klan hood."

"Responsible advertisers... have stopped supporting the Post Eagle," suggested Dershowitz.

Continued support of the Post Eagle can only be interpreted as bigoted message of the Post Eagle. Now that you know its negative message, I am confident that you will not want to support it with your advertising dollars.

Proving that not all monitor lizards are four-legged beasts who creep about in tropical jungles, Prof. Dershowitz then recommended that everyone "let me know if you intend to advertise in the Post Eagle in the future."

Chester Grabowski, the president and editor of the Post Eagle (P.O. Box 2127, Clifton, NJ 07015), printed Dershowitz's letter on December 13, alongside an editorial recounting the past record of "this Poland hater, Pope hater, nun hater," and warning that he was "opening Pandora's box."

On December 20, the 27th annual Special Christmas Issue of the Post Eagle appeared -- 60 pages in length, 278 paid ads -- proclaiming "Joy to the World!" Only a handful of advertisers had fearfully withdrawn, while others had actually requested that their ads be enlarged as a sign of support.

The Dershowitz boycott was a total failure. What Grabowski and a leading contributor, Colorado psychologist Ray M. Jurjevich, call the "F.O.J. Syndrome" (for "Fear of the Jews") may be losing its grip on the ethnic whites of northern New Jersey.

In January, Dershowitz's nationally syndicated column insisted, "Contacted by my office, [the] public officials said now that they are aware of the bigotry of the Post Eagle, they will no longer advertise in its pages. That is in the highest tradition of our First Amendment." The final score will not be known until this coming Christmas, when Dershowitz and his minions will have had a full year in which to harass the Post Eagle's supporters.

In a related development, the hostess of a popular Polish-language radio program on WT Wel-AM radio (860) in Philadelphia, Genia Gunther, was fired and quickly rehired after airing the opinions of an anti-Jewish Pole from Katowice named Alfred Slusarz on her January 21 program. Slusarz criticized Lech Walesa for "enabling the [Polish] government to be taken over by Jew-commies under the guise of Solidarity." Gunther's 28 years of broadcasting in Polish and her insistence that she never listened to Slusarz's tape before broadcasting it made little impression on the Beasley Broadcasting Co. In the wind-up, however, Gunther was allowed to continue -- "on probation."

Stirlets

• Little Rock's Central High School was one of the battlegrounds of the civil rights movement. Until 1957, when Eisenhower's paratroopers integrated it by force, no black students were seen ambling along the school corridors. Early last October, a riot broke out in Central High, now 60% black. Some 300 students were involved in the fighting, which was characterized by blacks beating whites. Some lib-mems would call this "progress."

• Ads for Michael Hoffmann II's comic book, Tales of the Holohox, were found inside more than 20 books in the North Plainfield (NJ) library. Equally horrific! Some library books contained pamphlets disputing Anne Frank's authorship of The Diary of Anne Frank.

• After an exhaustive investigation, the National Geographic Society has found to its satisfaction that Admiral Robert Peary was indeed the first man to set foot on the North Pole. Crackpots, cranks and spinners of tall tales had attacked Peary as a liar, alleging he had never come closer than 40 miles or so to the Pole. Minority "spokesmen" hedged their charges of fabrication by asserting that, even if Peary were telling the truth, the credit of being first belonged to his black factotum, Matthew Henson. After the National Geographic report, it will be difficult for nonwhite detractors to throw much more mud at Peary's reputation. But among mud people, mud is never in short supply.
