
Black Literary Scene

The universally applauded Toni Morrison has won the 1993 Nobel Prize for Literature for writing racially attuned novels about her people and their earthy lifestyles. Any Majority writer who indulged in the same obsessive racism on the white side would run into a solid wall of censorship.

The last four "Americans" to win the Nobel Prize for Literature before Ms. Morrison were: 1987 Joseph Brodsky, a one-time Soviet Jew who mainly writes in Russian; 1980 Czeslaw Milosz, a onetime Polish diplomat who came to the U.S. in 1960 and who writes (and speaks) English with an accent; 1978 Isaac B. Singer, an American Jew from Poland who specializes in Yiddish; 1976 Saul Bellow, a Chicago-born Jew whose mother tongue miraculously happens to be English.

Poor America! The land of Herman Melville, Emily Dickinson and William Faulkner has not only lost its soul; it has lost control of its language. What's worse, we now have difficulty preserving the good names of our own literary greats. Andy Hoffman, a Jewish editor connected with Brown University, is working on a biography of Mark Twain which, he claims, will prove that America's greatest humorist was a homo. Concurrently, Shelley Fisher Fishkin, a Jewish literary critic, says she has discovered that Twain's most famous character, Huck Finn, was based on a real-life Negro kid.

Mark Twain a homo?

Along with Morrison's $825,000 prize came news that Rita Dove, another black literary light, has been named America's Poet Laureate. A Negress married to a German, Ms. Dove writes passable poetry that is all tied up and weighted down with blackness.

Another apostle of minority racism is Maya Angelou, the black poetess who bored tens of millions of TV viewers at Clinton's Inauguration.

Not yet aspiring to Nobel laureate status is P.K. McCary, who has translated the first five books of the Old Testament into hip hop. Recognize this? "You shouldn't diss the Almighty's name, using it in cuss words or rapping with one another. It ain't cool and payback's a monster." That's the Third Commandment. How about "Don't waste nobody," the hip hop version of the Eighth? Instaurationists who want to dig more of the Ten Commandments in black face should acquire a copy of Black Bible Chronicles (African American Family Press, $14.95) at their nearest bookstore.

Trials and Tribes

Two white L.A. cops, Stacey Koon and Laurence Powell, were sentenced to 30 months by a racially mixed jury for going a little overboard in restraining the bone-crushing antics of black recidivist Rodney King. Requests for bail during their appeals were denied by Supreme Court Justice O'Connor. Meanwhile, Dept. of Justice lawyers, cheered on by Janet Reno, are appealing the sentences, which are considered too light to satisfy black Angelenos. As for King, who has had four more run-ins with the police since his televised beating, he is demanding $9.2 million in damages from the public purse. One-quarter of U.S. judges, because of the double jeopardy implications, believe the second trial was unconstitutional.

The two whites have to be concerned with their safety in prison, since black convicts like nothing better than to "mix it up" with white cops who become fellow inmates. Koon said he was unafraid. Powell often seemed terrified.

It's possible the duo may be sent to one of those Club Fed jails which have no bars and where the inmates spend much of their time gardening and cooking. The Dublin Federal Prison Camp, some 40 miles east of San Francisco, is one possible destination. That's where Michael Milken whiled away his two years.

Two white Detroit cops, Larry Nevers and Walter Budzyn, were given jail sentences of 12 to 25 years and 8 to 15 years, respectively, for the "undue force" they used to subdue the appropriately named veteran black convict, Malice Green, who died in the course of his strenuous resistance. As in the Koon-Powell case, bail was denied the cops pending their appeals. The jury that convicted them was allowed to see the film Malcolm X while sequestered. The lone white juror claimed he was pressured into voting guilty.

Two blacks, Damian Williams, 20, and Henry Watson, 28, were tried for the attempted murder of Reginald Denny, the white truck driver caught in the midst of last year's uprising (53 dead and $1 billion in damages). The jury was composed of 3 whites, 4 blacks 4 Hispanics and 1 Asian. A few jurors were replaced during the trial for various reasons. One of the low points of the proceedings was Denny's hugging and kissing the mothers of the black defendants.

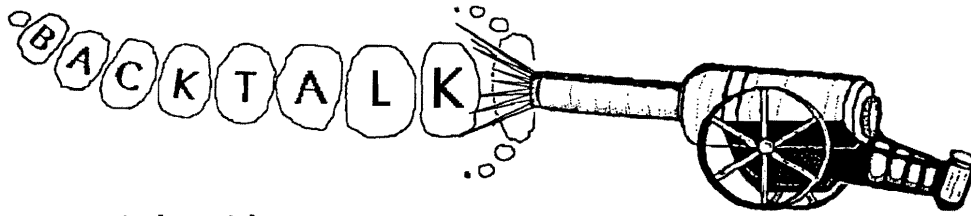

Threats of riots from blacks hung over the courtroom activities. If the sentences should be too harsh, many blacks had promised to riot. If the defendants were found guilty and given sentences comparable to or shorter than those given Koon and Powell, all might be peace and quiet. But if the blacks, as they deserve, were given longer prison time, then, as one L.A. Negro told a reporter, "It will be ashes." Owing to the racially mixed jurors, who were deadlocked on some of the more serious charges, the verdicts were even more lenient than expected. Racial politics not justice ruled the day.

The two nondescript whites who poured gasoline on a black tourist in Tampa were given life sentences. The victim, who was up and about during the trial, received no more lasting injuries than Denny.

In Boston a black man who had badly beaten a 29-year-old white woman solely because of her skin color was pronounced guilty by a jury that included two blacks and two Asians. But the black assailant was not convicted of a hate crime, which could have extended his 2 1/2-year sentence to ten years.

It is becoming more obvious every day that democracy does not work in a racially mixed country. Neither does trial by jury. Sooner or later both of these Western institutions will have to be abandoned in the U.S. The question is: Will the abandonment be accomplished peacefully?

Old-Timey Capital Punishment

On the issue of execution by the state (Waspishly Yours, August 1993), Medieval Germany had the most humane method. The executee wasn't given a date for his extinction. When the prisoner was let out of his cell to perform his daily ablutions, the executioner, hiding in an alcove or side passage, would surprise him with a fatal whack on the back of his head with a large wooden mallet. Death was instantaneous and painless. Even our lethal injection method doesn't come close for humaneness and in lack of apprehension on the victim's part.

Bitter Words from an Unenthusiast

The author of "Don't Cry for Bosnia" (Feb. 1993) should rewrite the piece and title it "Don't Cry for America." It's the norm among Americans to turn a blind eye to the suffering caused by the war machine that has usurped the national military. It's a matter of great pride to most Americans that they cannot state the reasons for committing the country to war. Second in popularity only to watching blacks play basketball come the televised scenes of slaughter. Some Americans like the part where the aerial bombs destroy entire city blocks. Others prefer watching tanks blast inhabited enemy houses. Couch potatoes by the millions enjoyed watching those weirdos in Waco get burned alive. After all, they were asking for it—just like the 8 million German civilians fried by the Christian American bomber pilots. At WWII's end, by depriving the people in northeastern Germany of water, fuel, food and weapons, the Americans facilitated the murder of several million civilians as the Communist monster in the East went about hunting down and mopping up every German it could find. When it happens here, don't cry for America.

Today in this country the once proud white man, the one who flew those daring 800 plane raids over Berlin, is a true democrat. He is happy to give his women the best money-making jobs available, as long as they do not have any children. He is also happy to give his women to the black and brown racists who swarm the shores of this inglorious phonocracy. And so boys and girls out there in TV land, when you hear about America going down, don't cry. Have a Coke and smile!

More of Us, Fewer of Them

Instauration's writers sometimes support birth and population control. The Elsewhere writer (Sept. 1993) stated, "China's population policies should be applauded." In the same issue another writer lamented the endangered species status of the world's Nordic minority, "Where Have All the Nordics Gone?"

The population controllers often (not always) seem to advocate that Majority members limit production of their group. The Majority (actually a minority worldwide) should not be expected to reduce its birthrate as long as other groups (Asians, Africans, Latins) expand dramatically both in numbers and in power. A case can and should be made for Majority population expansion.

The depiction of alienated "lone wolf" whites in the minority-dominated movie and entertainment industry during the past half-century (starting with Humphrey Bogart in the 1940s) has inaccurately and probably intentionally propagandized the general public into favorably regarding whites who have no interest in raising families. If we accept the role models offered us by minority-dominated Hollywood, we will never rebuild the family-structured society we need and never be able to benefit from the security and strength which only increased numbers of our own kind can provide.

Stinger Too Tabloidish

V.S. Stinger's Waspishly Yours column (August 1993) was largely addressed to me following a Safety Valve letter I wrote labeling his writing in the September 1992 issue "yellow journalism." The main subject of that column was a Jewish convict named Robert Manning who, wanted by the FBI for questioning in connection with two pipe-bomb murders, fled to Israel. Only recently has he been extradited back to the U.S.

I stated in my letter that white Gentiles are known for compassion. Stinger spent the greater part of his column ridiculing this statement. He spent the rest of his column detailing various gruesome atrocities that have occurred in Europe or been caused by Europeans over the centuries, including executions by disemboweling that enabled the victim to see "his guts spilled into his lap." The Waspish columnist went out of his way to remind us of such atrocities as the bombing of Dresden and the starving of German POWs after WWII, in which whites like Churchill and Eisenhower had a hand.

His point was that Europeans have a history of vengeance against their enemies that should not be forgotten. To that I agree, though I'm not ready to agree that the extreme examples Stinger rolled out are typical or even desirable instances of European behavior or ethics.

At any rate, my charge of yellow journalism still stands. The overall tone of his August column further justifies my assertion. Stinger's writing lacks sobriety. It is theatrical without being relevant. It reeks of ad hominem snickering.

Stinger's overall argument isn't totally out of bounds. Enemies should be dealt with harshly, to prevent them from inflicting severe damage on their foes. Nothing wrong with that. But the tenor of his writing and the examples he provides to support his ideas need to be changed. The yellow journalism which characterizes the scandal sheets and newspapers at supermarket checkout stands may stir the blood, but they don't contain worthwhile information or encourage careful, constructive thinking.

Tribulations of Small Political Parties

The British subscriber (Sept. 1993, p. 12) who links electoral failure on the part of right-wing parties in Britain with intolerance of homosexuality must surely be joking. A more glaring non sequitur is difficult to imagine.

Our problems at the polls in Britain can be attributed almost wholly to the electoral system, which in virtually any election creates a two-horse race. Small parties in Britain, unlike those in Continental Europe, cannot expect to get seats in Parliament in proportion to the votes cast for them. Voters therefore only rarely consider any candidate who does not seem to have a fair chance to win. The voter's general tendency is to decide which candidate or party he dislikes most (among the front-runners, that is) and then to vote for the one who stands the best chance of beating him. This freezes out small-party candidates, even though they might have been the preferred choice.

In most of mainland Europe the proportional system operates in a way that makes a vote for a small party worthwhile. A few candidates in representative bodies can hold the balance of power—or at least form the stepping-stones upon which a larger representation in the future can be built. The system was working in France during the rise of Le Pen. A few years ago it was changed to the winner-take-all American system. As a result, Le Pen's party, which had 35-plus delegates in the French Chamber of Deputies before the switch, now has none. Politicians are in the process of giving up popular representation in Italy because it accounts for the strength of fascist and quasi-fascist parties. There is some opportunity for a nationalist party under the British system, but only under circumstances of exceptional breakdown and crisis—which may now be on the way. No such party can flourish in times that even remotely approximate normality.

The Catholicism of Black Catholics

With all due respect to the editors of MFM (My Favorite Magazine), Instauration erred last September (page 18) in labeling Washington, D.C.'s (black) Bishop George Stallings a Roman Catholic. Stallings may be many things (among them, a pedophile/homosexual extraordinaire, a boffo racist and a slanderer of other peoples' religions par excellence), but he ain't no mackerel-snapper. Though Catholics footed the bill for his education and then issued him an officer's commission in their Church, Stallings concluded about a decade ago he didn't like what his big brown priestly eyes saw in clerical racial tolerance. Bolting for the freedom of his own store-front pulpit, Stallings gained wide journalistic notoriety by attracting large numbers of black Catholics to a shoutin'-strummin'-stompin' Motown liturgy that provided a forum for lambasting Catholicism's European clubbishness which, despite denials, has never cottoned to cotton pickers. Negroes, who come to the altar bereft of pride of race, culture or accomplishment, feel uneasy among the Euro-ethnics. Recent popes, sensing the alienation, have attempted to improve matters, but without great success. By tradition, blacks favor the doctrinal minimalism of fundamentalist Protestantism, with its rural, down-home religious trappings. Black conversions to Catholicism, which began in the late 1950s, amounted to a marriage of convenience made attractive by the decline of urban public schools. Northern blacks, seeing the virtue of submitting their children to the doctrinaire, no-nonsense demands of school-marm nuns, converted and then immediately pled poverty to circumvent the tuition bill. (Another racial minority did the same in the Spain of Ferdinand and Isabella.) With Catholic schools closing almost daily throughout inner cities, Stallings-esque imbroglis are sure to pop up ever more regularly.

There He Goes Again

Once again N.B. Forrest (Backtalk, July 1993) finds hidden virtues in Christianity. To say that Christianity was the driving wheel behind Western civilization from the 5th century A.D. on is wide of the mark. Long before there was a church our folk constantly strove for new land, riches and knowledge. It was the Church's suppression of knowledge, not our Faustian dynamism, that caused the Dark Ages.

The West drove on in spite of Christianity, not because of it. We only slowly climbed out of the Dark Ages because the findings of Galileo, Copernicus and many others made the Church's doctrine look so stupid that the popes had to give ground, though stubbornly, grudgingly and with as much repression as possible. That's not what I call a driving wheel for progress. No, the Church was and is an impediment to progress, and worse. If it weren't for Christianity, I suggest that we would have been where we are now in science 500 years ago.

For Forrest to say that forced conversion did not account for Christianity's triumph in Northern Europe is ridiculous. Take Charlemagne, the Saxon slayer, who was ordered by Rome to bring the Saxons into the fold lox, stock and bagel. And what about those perverts, the Teutonic Knights who, like the Church hierarchy, were so afraid of women they vowed chastity, but were not afraid to burn and kill anyone who wouldn't convert? The modus operandi of the Church was to buy off the local chieftain who in return would see that the leading members of the tribe would convert. As many hundreds of thousands found out the hard way, it was very unhealthy to be of a different religion than your chief. Do you call that peaceful conversion? Despite the torture, many of those poor folks had the dignity and honor to go to their gods with unbended knees. As for the assertion that without the unifying influence of the Church, Russians, Poles and the Spanish would not have survived the Mongol or Muslim invasions, you sure can't prove that by the Germans at Teutoburger Wald or the Scots north of Hadrian's Wall, who clobbered the Romans. Jesus may or may not have had their heads, but Odin had their hearts.

The old Gods served our people's interests for a long, long time. That we as a people turned our heads, or more accurately had our heads turned from them, was not their fault. Our gods never claimed to be perfect. They are not immortal. Neither did they create, nor do they control the universe. They, as we, are part of the universe. They are our archetypes, our archetypes alone. They will strive with us and show us how to be true to ourselves. They will not sit in judgment on us or hand us a lollipop if we are good, or take it away if we are bad. Perhaps Christianity was something that we had to go through so that we would realize later how natural it was for us to be with our own gods.

I don't believe that any individual or race can live in tune with the universe and fulfill its destiny while worshipping or giving lip service to the god of an alien people whose race-soul is totally alien to ours.

If we as a people don't fit the definition of being grossly out of harmony with our race-soul and our place in the universe, I don't know who does. If we want to get in tune with ourselves and fulfill our destiny, we should start by returning to our own gods and dropping Christianity like a bad habit—before both we and our gods end up in history's scrap heap.

Name Game

European American is the aptest term for white Americans. We may still be the Majority in America, but we are a small minority in the world. Instauration should refer to us as a specific ethnic group. It also helps when its writers use European instead of Northern European. The latter puts off many people of Central and Southern European descent and is too narrow. I always think of Scandinavians when I run into the words, Northern European. The Mediterranean and the Urals make for a better ethnic demarcation than some imaginary line through Central Europe.

Back In the Limelight

Katherine Ann Power, one of the 1960s let-it-all-hang-out harpies, drove the getaway car in a bank robbery that ended in the murder of a cop. The deed was the product of the revolutionary spitefulness she had absorbed at Brandeis, a Jewish university. Power escaped the clutches of lawmen for 23 years, then turned herself in after throwing a gala going-away party with her friends in Oregon, where she operated a restaurant and spawned an illegitimate child whose father she refuses to identify. Appearing in a Boston court, she seemed quite happy, smiled for the cameras and, as expected, was handed a lenient 8- to 12-year sentence. Her guru-ess, Susan Saxe, also a member of the murder gang, served seven years and is now employed by a Jewish foundation in Philadelphia. Bernardine Dohrn, another Jewish Medusa, was only given three year's probation after taking part in 12 bombings, one inside the Capitol in Washington. She is now a prosperous Chicago lawyer.

Right-wing activists don't fare so well. Members of The Order are in for life. A small federal army, including attack helicopters, was ordered to "take out" Robert Mathews, The Order's leader, and did so in a hail of bullets and firebombs.

Clinton in a Bind

Intelligent whites avoided the Black Death in 14th-century Europe by moving out to the country (see Boccaccio's Decameron). Today many whites are not avoiding the earth's plague spots, but searching them out and moving into the heart of them, as in Somalia, and blockading them, as in the more recent case of Haiti. Since the U.S. is currently hyped as the only remaining superpower and though its biggest cities are teetering on the edge of barbarism, the Clinton administration, falling for its own propaganda, apparently feels compelled to try to establish order elsewhere. The rule seems to be, if you can't run your own people and your own country, go abroad and try to run other countries, if not the world.

As for Clinton's domestic agenda, it is full of sound and fury, signifying next to nothing. NAFTA, if it gets through Congress, will speed up the Mexicanization that has already turned huge areas of the Southwest into a barrio. As Bill and Hillary may discover to their sorrow, the last thing the U.S. needs is free trade. What it needs is more trade protection to expand its languishing domestic market. Every country should have its own particular economy. A worldwide economy that ties every nation into a huge centralized economic net forces nation A to bend to the demands of nation B and vice versa. It all boils down to a process of equalization that helps to produce universal sameness.

Protective economies protect the unique lifestyles of races and peoples. Every nation should concentrate on developing an internal economy that meets its citizens' material needs while establishing a working environment that brings out the best in their productive capabilities. All hell can break loose when advanced economies are forced upon feudal economies and when economics is divorced from culture.

Economic competition should not be between Canada, the U.S. and Mexico. Citizens of one country can never compete fairly with citizens of another country. There are too many disparities in work habits, wage levels and natural resources. The only fair and consequently the only really productive economic competition is between people of the same race and culture.

Numbers Game

Jews will not permit the Census Bureau to count them, but they count or at least pretend to count themselves. The latest edition of the American Jewish Yearbook guesses that 5,828,000 Chosenites resided in the U.S. in 1992.

An earlier study in 1991 by another Jewish group came up with a headcount of some 5.5 million or about 2.2% of the total U.S. population. Still another survey, the National Jewish Population Study, stated that 4.4 million Chosenites were religious, of whom 2.4 million went to a synagogue or temple, and 400,000 belonged to the Orthodox sect. The ominous figure—ominous to both Jews and non-Jews—is that 52% of Jews who married after 1985 tied the knot with Gentiles.

Disgusting Love

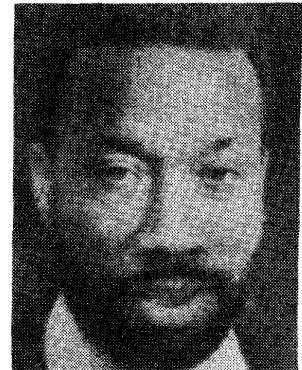

Peter Melzer teaches physics at the quasi-prestigious Bronx High School of Science. As an active member of the North American Man-Boy Love Association, he advocates exactly what the organization's title implies. Melzer taught at the school for 25 years before a special Zoo City school committee caught up with him. How many young kids he preyed upon inside and outside the classroom is not known.

To the delight of sodomites, NAMBLA goes lubriciously on its way, even publishing a periodical packed with the swinish homo pornography that appeals to its 1,000 swinish members. One group has been meeting regularly in Washington (DC) for 15 years. The International Lesbian and Gay Assn., an umbrella outfit that welcomes NAMBLA perverts, has been granted "consultive status" by the U.N.

The third paragraph of the N.Y. Times story on Peter Melzer began—oh so liberally and oh so typically Timesally: "Some First Amendment experts say his dismissal could have some Constitutional repercussions. . . ."

Kill Whites for a Change

Dallas city councilman John Wiley Price told the dusky listeners of a KLIF-AM radio show that if they would "stop shooting each other and start shooting some other folks, then people would begin to respect and understand that we're not going to take it anymore." Invited by host Bob Ray Sanders to explain, Price added that if "African-American people will. . . stop killing each other and start going after the real perpetrators, we probably wouldn't have the problems we're having in this country."

Price wants to kill the perpetrators

Price said that by "perpetrators," he did not mean "Jews." He explained, "Most African Americans don't know enough to be anti-Semitic. We don't know the difference between Anglos and Jewish people."

Bandolier Bobby

In September, a black D.C. teenager sprayed a busload of tourists with his AK-47 assault rifle. Box score: three wounded and (amazingly) none dead. After the trigger-happy adolescent was subdued, his mother appeared on local TV to insist her son "is really a good boy," though he's been "having problems in school lately." Presumably the Washington Post agreed. It didn't print a squib about her "Bandolier Bobby." Talk around the firehouse is that Juvenile Courts will feel similarly disposed. On the factor of age alone, the youth is expected to "walk."

The nightly murder rate that's exploding around the nation's capital has inspired black columnist William Raspberry to propose that now is the time to call in the National Guard. If we can deploy American soldiers in Mogadishu to protect the Somali people from violent war lords, he wonders why the Guard can't protect Washingtonians from their war lords.

Raspberry is wading in dangerous racial waters. Black advocates of D.C. statehood (and they are in the majority) say the first thing they'll do when the 51st state comes into being is disband the D.C. National Guard. "An arm of racial oppression," is how they describe it.

A resident of Washington (DC), who knows the territory, suggests two names for the District of Columbia when and if Congress can be persuaded to give the country's most minority-ridden area statehood. Off the top of his head came these two not altogether inappropriate suggestions: New Beirut or New Bosnia.

Instauration has a better moniker. How about New Mogadishu?

Whitenized Minorities

The latest ploy from the likes of M.I.T. economics Wunderkind, Lester ("You'd better educate them or they'll eat you alive") Thurow, is to warn everybody about the year 2000. That's the date statisticians tell us nonwhites will comprise half the nation's workforce. Though Thurow does not use the word, he says whites must make sure minorities come to work sufficiently "whitenized" so that the event doesn't turn into the disaster it clearly portends. Apart from the outright gall of Thurow decrying the consequences of what he advocates, he dares to imply that society can somehow sidestep the dead-weight loss which integration brings. Attempting to prepare the unpreparable is a double waste of social effort. Better let the minorities continue to draw their dole and forget the idealistic rest.

A Paradise Darkens

Camden, Maine, America's seacoast vacation paradise for whites fatigued by the sight of race-mixing, is as spectacular in its natural beauty as it is in the racial purity of its residents and summer guests. My 1993 Hild Index of Camden's racial whiteness, taken annually in September and defined as the number of nonwhites spotted per week of vacationing, tripled over the previous year. At a count of 21 nonwhites per week, it's the highest ever. But "nonwhite" in these parts doesn't equal

"black." Most in evidence were Asians, well-scrubbed youths apparently from prosperous families. One exception was the 27-year-old Ambassador from Oman who, while seated on the deck of a harborside restaurant, asked his hosts if the U.S. will still be around in the middle of the 21st century. They simply laughed, brushing the matter aside with a quip that it might be Oman itself that fails to make the cut. Here one might add that to anyone familiar with life in the present-day U.S. a question about the future of America is hardly idle speculation.

Thinking about the dramatic upswing in the Hild Index got me conjecturing why Asians, of all aliens, would find it pleasurable to seek out a village like Camden for their autumn vacation. Though I couldn't answer that one, it occurred to me that blacks, more than any minority, evidence a vast and strange urge to push themselves beyond their own racial "envelope." The later waves of European immigrants, except Jews of course, seldom "pushed"; most wished only to be left alone. Many thousands, including my maternal grandparents, actually returned to their homelands. In my family's case, the odyssey ended with a realistic look at the Depression economy of Weimar Germany. Hundreds of thousands of other returnees were not so choosy and lived out their lives in Italy, Poland and Wales. Blacks, for all their vocal bravado about the wonders of Africa, have not shown similar enthusiasm for their "roots."

Will Staten Island Secede?

On November 2, voters of this smallest of New York's five boroughs will go to the polls to decide whether or not to secede from the city. The N.Y. Times says it might happen despite threats of sharply higher taxes and a doubtful economic future. Staten Island, a traditional mix of church-going Italians, Irish, and Germans, is only 7% black, compared to Manhattan which is 25% black, 24% Hispanic, 7% Asian. With the highest per capita income of all the boroughs, Staten Island reflects the essential immigrant culture which flourished before the Big Apple became Zoo City. Now increasingly distressed by their political linkage to the "new" New York, Staten Islanders want out.

Kosher-Certified Rapsters

Entertainment giant Time Warner is out to beat the competition in the lucrative $700-million rap music (sic) market. After TW took some heat for distributing Ice T's Cop Killer disc, it let the antiwhite rapster's contract lapse. TW is now going ahead full steam promoting its "ultrahip" Tommy Boy label, which boasts such hits as Digital Underground Sex Packets, Naughty By Nature, De La Soul, and House of Pain.

At the center of TW's rap operation is a 39-year-old Chosenite, Thomas A. Silverman, whose assistant is Monica Lynch, 36, a former topless dancer of Irish Catholic background. Silverman launched Tommy Boy in 1981 with $10,000 borrowed from his parents. He later sold it to TW, while remaining on as manager.

The next star in the ascendant of Silverman and Lynch's firmament is a mammoth cross-dresser who goes by the name of RuPaul. His, her, its Supermodel of the World disc is currently high on the charts. Around Christmas, Tommy Boy will release RuPaul's remake of The Little Drummer Boy. As Silverman explained, their challenge is "to get people to see RuPaul as more than just a 7-foot blond black drag queen."

Although rap is the creation of ghetto blacks and musicologically resembles the primitive chanting of African pygmies, it is pulling in its biggest sales in the largely white suburbs. Dressed like their dusky inner-city role models, deracinated white males—contemptuously referred to in the trade as "voyeurs"—are snapping up the Kosher-certified CDs so fast there are waiting lines.

House-and-Home Dept.

A Naples (FL) real estate broker discusses the slaughter of foreign tourists in his state:

Sure we've been taking a lot of heat lately about those racial killings over there in the Miami area. But the simple fact is that Naples isn't Miami. Never will be. There's too many solid Midwesterners living here to let that happen. Sure, I'll admit Miami's a zoo. But let me tell you the place is great for a weekend. It's all in knowing where to go. Anyway, things are getting overblown on the murder thing. It's only because foreigners are involved. We had hundreds of Floridians killed last year, and you hardly heard a peep from the media about that. A few foreigners get chopped up, and we have to pack it in? Get real! Tourism may suffer. But real estate will always be golden. Always was, always will be.

CLIENT: But what about the blacks?
BROKER: Whoops, I'm not talking race! My Florida real estate license forbids that. You can ask me. But I can't answer.

CLIENT: Thanks, I think you told me all I needed to know.

Bottom Fishing

Clinton once pontificated that he wanted his government to "look more like America"; actually it is beginning to look more like the people who attend N.Y. Times editorial conferences or NAACP conventions. Clinton's worst appointment, still unconfirmed at this writing, is indubitably Morton Halperin, who desperately wants the newly created job of Asst. Secretary of Defense for Democratization and Peacekeeping (the title depends on which newspaper you read). It might have but obviously didn't occur to Clinton that the last person to hold a high Defense Dept. post should be a Jewish intellectual who took the side of Uncle Ho in the Vietnam War. Perhaps the nomination was an example of draft-dodger oblige.

Clinton didn't appoint John Shannon, the undistinguished black Acting Secretary of the Army, who was caught red-handed stealing $30 worth of women's wear from an Army PX. But the Slick One did appoint the new Secretary of the Army, Togo D. West Jr., a lawyer and airline lobbyist, whose first name puts him in the same racial slot as the disgraced Shannon.

The worst nominee to have been confirmed is probably Ron Brown, Clinton's black Secretary of Commerce. Brown has already lied about his contacts with a sleazy Vietnamese agent who allegedly offered him $700,000 to end or at least lower the U.S. trade barrier with Vietnam. As the former chairman of the Democratic National Committee, Brown is probably the most powerful black in national politics.

Will the mighty Brown fall?

Because Clinton knows the howl that would come from black voters if the big-shot "brother" was given the sack, Brown has a good chance of hanging on to his job no matter what he does. A federal jury is looking into the matter, but someone will really have to get the goods on the Commerce Secretary to boot him out of government. It should not be forgotten that Brown "was forgiven" for failing to make Social Security payments for his household help, a money-saving lapse that forced the withdrawal of some of Clinton's earlier nominees.

First Black Prez?

In WWII, General George Marshall, the top military man in charge, did a fairly good job of running the Armed Forces. Though some friends sent up trial balloons, few politicians considered him a serious presidential candidate. The hopes and dreams of the Republicans, who didn't have one of their own in the Oval Office for two decades, focused on Eisenhower, the general in the field. MacArthur, also under consideration, was much more intelligent than Ike (not too difficult a feat), but too much of a grandstander for G.O.P. tastes and too much of an authoritarian for the media. Also, he didn't remain with his besieged troops in the Philippines, having been submarined out just in time to escape spending the rest of the war in a Japanese prison camp.

Today, as it has the habit of doing in every aspect of politics, the race factor has screwed up the conventional path of a successful general to the apex of American government. The newly retired Colin Powell, as chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, didn't run as big a show as Marshall by any means. The Gulf War pales in comparison to what has become known as the Good War. If the usual pattern of electing generals to high office held, Powell wouldn't stand a chance. The man who should be given the nod is Stormin' Norman Schwarzkopf, the general in the field. Instead, all the talk, all the PR, all the psst-pssting in the corridors and all the smoke in the smoke-filled rooms have been concentrated on Powell. The desk general is talked up; the field general is played down.

Pat Robertson, the super-Christian and super-Republican, has already come out for Powell, although so far the press likes to pretend the octoroon general is apolitical. That Powell has publicly stated his two great heroes are Thomas Jefferson and Martin Luther King Jr. might at least furnish a hint of his political stance. It is doubtful if Jefferson, the Democrats' sacred icon, and King, a modern Demo saint, would vote the Republican ticket under any conditions. Also, it's difficult for Washington watchers to forget that back in the days of the Vietnam disaster Powell tooled around the capital in a Volkswagen emblazoned with a Lyndon Johnson bumper sticker.

Clinton's Folly

The basics are clear: the nation spends 13% of its $5 trillion-plus GNP on health care, which provokes a cry for medical reform that Clinton has interpreted as a mandate to dump the nation's 37 million medically uninsured into the hands and pocketbooks of those with insurance. Such a vision of reform can only boost demand for medical services and skyrocket the price of medical care for everyone.

Among the 37 million uninsured are the racial minorities. Once they're freed from the onus of begging for their pills, they'll use the system as their plaything, a private preserve to repair to when the chickens of a dissipated life come home to roost.

What I have written doesn't mean that some uninsured folks haven't encountered some pretty bad medical luck. In fact, it's just these unfortunates Clinton's minions point to when they attempt to sell their program. But, strictly speaking, it won't be the deserving poor who benefit from "Clinton's Folly." It will be the minorities for whom public welfare has become an endless drain on white income.

IVAN HILD

Another Marxist Gaffe

One of the great howlers of Marxism, which is a string of ideological howlers (but despite the Soviet fiasco is still taken to heart by many U.S. eggheads), is that people let their bank accounts tell them how to vote. The rich are supposed to vote for conservatives (Republicans); the poor supposed to vote for liberals (Democrats).

If this neat generalization is true, why do Hollywood producers and executives, possessors of multimillion-dollar bank accounts, not only vote down the line for the Democratic Party, but contribute huge sums to bulging Democratic Party coffers?

Take the battle for Paramount Communications (films, Cheers, Simon & Schuster) by two Jewish moguls, Sumner Redstone, net worth $4 billion according to Time, and Barry Diller, chairman of a home shopping TV network and onetime head of various movie studios. Redstone has offered $8.2 billion for Paramount, whose chairman is Martin Davis, another Chosenite. All these people are party-lining Democrats. If Marx was right, they should be raging Republicans.

Redstone, originally Rothstein (where and when he picked up the good old English name of Sumner only Yahweh knows), is chairman and major stockholder of MTV, whose electronic tentacles reach out to 270 million homes in 77 countries. MTV is one of the most crapulous, left-wing, pro-Democratic program on the tube. Considering the size of Redstone's wallet, one would think he'd order the program to be toned down and given more balance, so as to give a break once in a while to Republicans and conservatives. Although a Democratic administration may cost him a few unneeded bucks in the form of higher taxes, Redstone knows that by playing in left field he can more easily control a large fraction of the media and, by controlling the media, he and his gang can essentially control a large slice of American public opinion, as well as taking daily swipes at the hated and potentially anti-Semitic WASP elite.

Unforgiveness at Work

John Demjanjuk, the Ukrainian American cleared by the Israeli Supreme Court of war crimes, is back in the U.S.—but not back to his home in Cleveland. Jews, despite a local ordinance forbidding it, were marching and demonstrating in front of his house. As a result, Demjanjuk, his wife, his children and grandchildren had to have their long-delayed family reunion in some secret hideout well removed from the eternally vengeful eye of Jewry.

Demjanjuk was stripped of his U.S. citizenship and extradited to Israel, a country that did not even exist when he allegedly committed his crimes. There he was sentenced to death on the testimony of five aged "survivors" who swore on the Old Testament he was Ivan the Terrible, a sadistic guard at the Treblinka concentration camp, where a hyperbolic 850,000 are supposed to have perished.

Later, as Demjanjuk's case degenerated into a mire of misidentification, faulty memory and forged documents, the less neurotic of his neurotic prosecutors had to agree that the evidence against him was no longer credible. So with nary a shekel of reparations and nary a word of apology, Israel's highest court let him go.

But stereotypical Jews in America would not let him go. They tried to keep him out of the U.S. by all sorts of legal maneuvers and continued to hound him in the press. Finally, thanks to a decent American Judge, Gilbert Merritt of the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals, who has taken a lot of heat from the Chosen and may have been crossed off Clinton's short list of potential Supreme Court Justices for his fairness, Demjanjuk was allowed back in the U.S.

Some Jewish blowhards have threatened to kill the onetime auto worker. Others are working full time to drag him back into court. The Jewish avengers on the payroll of the Office of Special Investigations are working overtime looking for ways to deport him to any country that will take him.

To justify their $3-million-a-year budget, the O.S.I. witch-hunters have been quite willing to inject double jeopardy in race-related and Holocaust-related trials. Ironically, the people who have long relied on Anglo-Saxon law for their protection are now doing their best to destroy it. If they succeed, their victory may ensure their own eventual defeat.

From the Horse's Mouth

Stuart Eizenstat, Jimmy Carter's White House political director, later professor at Harvard's Kennedy School of Government, is now to be addressed as Ambassador Eizenstat, U.S. envoy to the European Community. His appointment recalls his interesting and somewhat revealing statement about the role of Jews in government:

There is a difference between being a Jewish advocate and a Jew in the White House. The real definition of Jewish power is when Jews are in all phases of an administration, and don't have to hide—not just when they organize to pass a bill.

Eizenstat made it clear that "Jewish power" is pervasive in the Clinton Administration. Never in the history of the Republic have so many kosher faces been positioned in so many key government slots. Eizenstat is equally hip to the way his E.C. job can help Israel. Mother Zion is currently promoting passage of laws that would render illegal any form of E.C. member participation in Arab boycotts of Israel.

Brussels, incidentally, is not far from Bonn, where Richard Holbrooke, the new American Ambassador to Germany, will be holding forth. Holbrooke's Jewish mother, Trudi, fled the Nazis in 1933.

Costly Advice

When Cynthia Carbone, a white single mother with a 2-year old son, considered moving into the Hickory Hollow Cooperative in Wayne (MI), she called the local police department and asked if it was a safe location. Two Wayne police dispatchers, Carla Farmer and Myra Jan Wal-drop, informing her that crime and drug usage were rampant among the black residents of the housing project, suggested she look elsewhere for a roof over her head.

Instead of expressing quiet gratitude for the warning, Carbone told Hickory Hollow site manager Tracie Hammond, who is also white, about the call. Hammond immediately contacted the Public Safety Director and Police Chief, and the co-op board wasted no time filing a federal lawsuit seeking damages and demanding that the dispatchers be prohibited from answering emergency calls. City officials issued apologies. Board Treasurer James Netter, race unknown, hailed Carbone as a "white Rosa Parks." U.S. District Judge John Feikens has ordered the entire Wayne Police Department to undergo "diversity" training. The two dispatchers have been told to apologize in public or face dismissal.

Carbone, who is enrolled in criminal justice classes at Henry Ford Community College, said she hopes to become a police officer after she graduates.

The Latest from Vidor

Vidor is the blackless Texan town of 12,000 that hit the headlines recently when Bill Simpson, the last black, departed and was murdered by a fellow black in an attempted robbery shortly after he had arrived in Beaumont, a city eight miles west on Interstate 10. To make Vidor safe for blacks, Henry Cisneros, Secretary of HUD, grabbed some headlines of his own by seizing the town's public housing and promising to fill it with a slew of colored folk.

A Klansman, Michael Lowe, accused of participating in the ethnic cleansing in Vidor, was arrested and charged with racial harassment. Being without funds, a condition common to many contemporary Kluxers, he was provided a lawyer by the ACLU. And wouldn't you know, Anthony Griffin was not only a black but the general counsel of the Texas NAACP. This twist of fate dominated the front pages of the local press for several days. The Klansman's lawyer stuck to his assignment through thick and thin, as the Negro power structure accused him of racial treason. Lowe had only the nicest things to say about his attorney, who was eventually fired from his job as the NAACP's general counsel. Meanwhile, Griffin has the difficult task of trying to keep the state authorities from seizing the Klan's membership list, which, for all one knows, is already in the file cabinets of the Anti-Defamation League.

Not exactly a role model for judges, Jewish or otherwise, Sol Wachtler not so long ago was the chief judge of the N.Y. State Appeals Court. Some of his Republican friends said he was destined for the U.S. Supreme Court. Actually, he was

On Sept. 28, after being granted permission to spend the Jewish holy days with his family, he started serving his 15-month prison sentence. In an attempt to reduce his sentence or avoid jail altogether, he had had a series of exculpatory interviews with the press in which he claimed his acts were "manic episodes brought about by toxic reactions to drugs." Six doctors supported this ploy, along with his four children. Zoo City Mayor Dinkins and Governor Mario Cuomo wrote the judge in the case, begging for mercy for the errant jurist. They didn't mention that Wachtler, who wears elevator shoes and puts on makeup to conceal the scars of his face-lift, sent Silverman's daughter a condom in the mail and promised to follow this up with pictures of her mother fornicating with an unknown man.

Waspishly Yours

What is one to make of Henry VIII, who set up a religious shop of his own because he wanted to divorce the barren ex-wife of his dead brother in order to tie a bowline knot with mistress Anne Boleyn? Was Henry a race traitor for starting a new religion? Was Martin Luther or Mary Baker Eddy or Joseph Smith? I think not, no more than a Swede who is crazy enough to become a Muslim, Jew or a hindsighted (i.e., cow-crazy) Hindu. Doubtless I feel this way because, despite William James, I consider religion more a matter of psychiatry than of theology. America's foremost psychologist, the patron saint of pragmatism no less, argued that "evidence" didn't matter in the matter of religion; pragmatically, man needed it, and that was that. Whatever works is good. So if you're happy worshipping your pet rock or your bank account, go for it! Heaven is just around the bend of the next debenture, the next helter-skelter to the next tax shelter, the next reduction in your capital gains index. All of the above is quite different from race treason, as I see it.

Why are Senators Lieberman, Metzenbaum, Specter (the ghoul who haunts the U.S. Treasury for Israel), Alfonse (as in Capone) D'Amato and other apologists for Israel so hot for U.S. intervention in Bosnia? First, intervention will keep the arms industry operating—at the expense of the U.S. taxpayer—at a higher level than what is projected now. Jews require the U.S. to have an enormous and readily available backlog of planes, tanks and cluster bombs to ship to Israel, in the event you know what. It was the U.S. round-the-clock airlift to the Israelis in 1973 which saved their shaved foreskins from the Egyptian Third Army on the banks of the Suez. Israel got the guns and ammo we literally strip-mined from every military warehouse in America. We got the shaft with the taxes needed to replenish our stores. Estimates are that if the Red Army had attacked us at the end of Israel's 1973 War, we would, literally, have been bankrupt for spare parts, ammunition, tanks and other wartime implementa. What a huge cornucopia Kissinger copiously dumped into Israel's wartime effort! And were we ever repaid for the taxes which were left as litter in the Sinai? Don't ask.

Of course, we were repaid—with more requests for weapons and money and, to add insult to injury, annual baksheesh to the amount of $2.5-billion was piled on later to bribe the Egyptians not to attack Israel ever again. Of course we were repaid. Before Pearl Harbor we shipped the Japanese our scrap metal, which they returned with interest. But the Jews were so much more clever than the, oh, so clever Nips. The Jews didn't have to convert our scrap into bombs. We sent them the finished products to kill 34 Americans on the U.S.S. Liberty. And they repaid us even more handsomely by allowing a paradise-bound fanatic to blow up 241 Marines in Beirut in 1983. Of course, we were repaid. And we are still repaid daily by the shills who shim-sham for Israel on the "Occupied Territory" called Capitol Hill. It's the price we pay to the tail that wags the dog and in the process skews our domestic and foreign policy.

Jews push for intervention in Bosnia so they can claim the moral high ground, where they love to be—despite the rape, plunder and pillage of Palestine. They can claim to be wholly holier-than-thou because the Holocaust they visited on and continue to visit on Southern Lebanon is justifiable because its in defense of a land they stole fair and square. That's what passes for morality among the Jews. Why not? Don't they come by these piratical premises completely honestly, i.e., right out of Exodus? Actually, their propaganda machine is based on the premise—and correctly so—that Americans have a very short historical memory. Besides, Jews have been crying crocodile tears so long—by the waters of Babylon, have I sat me down and wept!—that even when they're spouting blatant baloney, Americans are likely to waterspout tears of sympathy and approval. As Seymour M. Hersh, who should know, once said, Henry Kissinger lies the way other people breathe.

Lieberman & Co. don't want anyone reminded that Jews practiced "ethnic cleansing" in 1948 and again in 1967, long before the Serbian cleansers in Bosnia.

Jews will fight for black civil rights in America, where they can use our African-American mud brothers as a front, while at the same time condoning the crimes against humanity their co-religionists are committing in Palestine. If blacks in America were being treated the way Jews are treating Palestinians, American Jews would be leading the charge for "justice" up the steps of the Capitol.

But what's the Cold War got to do with ethnic cleansing in Bosnia? Israel never was a "strategic asset." We had to bribe her to stay out of Desert Sturm and Dreck, for fear that Jewish intervention would crack open our cash register coalition. If anything, Israel was and is a strategic liability. It never served as a bulwark against Russian incursion into the Middle East. Its presence was the cause of a Russian threat in a region which otherwise would have been stable, conservative and more than willingly allied to America. Why would all those right-wing Arabs with all that black gold in the ground and all those gold bathroom fixtures to protect be foolish enough to exchange the Koran for Das Kapital?

V.S. STINGER

Eighteen network TV shows now contain "Jewish telev-mages," meaning that they either have noticeably Jewish actors and actresses, deal with Jewish themes, or otherwise permeate the airways with snippets of identifiable kosher behavior. Jay Kogan, a leading TV writer-producer, sums up the situation tellingly: "I bring a Jewish past [cast?] to everything I write, even if it's about hillbillies in the Ozarks."

The new president of National Public Radio (478 stations, staff 30% minority, 50% women) is Delano Lewis, a former Peace Corps volunteer and Justice Dept. lawyer who is as black as Jennifer Lawson, PBS program director.

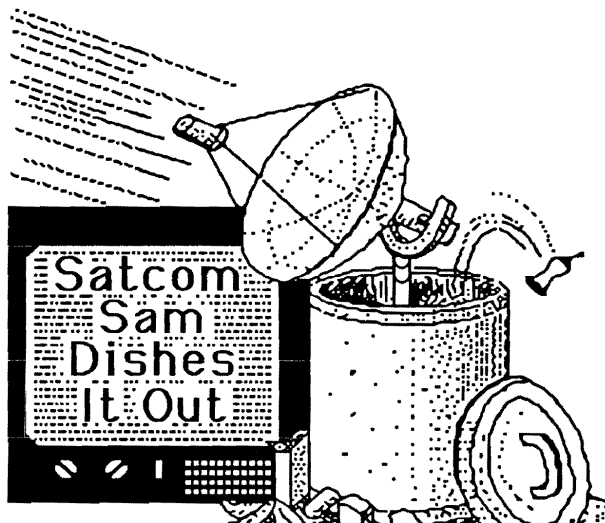

A year ago PBS aired a documentary which credited two "heroic" Negro army units with liberating Dachau and Buchenwald at the end of WWII. An almost total fabrication, it was only grudgingly admitted as such many moons later by one of the show's co-producers, WNET, Zoo City's PBS outlet. The two other co-producers, Nina Rosenblum (wouldn't you know?) and William Miles, refused to acknowledge the fraud and called their critics racists. They were honoring the now well-established TV canon that any untruth that advances the cause of minorities should be deemed the truth and nothing but the truth.

In February, CBS pulled off a similar hoax when it ran a two-hour special, The Incredible Discovery of Noah's Ark. A statement by one George Jammal that said he had personally seen Old Noah's houseboat and had a piece of the Ark to prove it, was cooked up by one Gerald Larue, a professor emeritus of biblical history at the University of Southern California. It seemed Jammal had never been near Mount Ararat, and his "relict" was only a hunk of ordinary wood.

The New York Times funded the recent convention of the National Lesbian and Gay Journalists Assn. (560 queer members) with a $40,000 grant. The purpose of the gathering was to drum up more TV jobs for homos. In attendance and paying their obligatory homage to the Third Sex were such luminaries as Injun Dan, Robert MacNeil, Tom Brokaw and Judy Woodruff. (Question: How could such a beautiful Nordic hitch herself to that prematurely gray and prematurely brain-dead host of the Capital Gang, Al Hunt?)

Satcom Sal reports. In late September I watched the new NBC magazine show, NOW, with Tom Brokaw and Katie Couric. One of its three segments focussed on Robert De Niro, not a particularly likeable man, but one who had acquitted himself well as an actor in the few films I'd seen him in. The reason he is newsworthy is that he is directing his latest movie, A Bronx Tale. Since it seemed to have some promise, I made a note to watch for its arrival in my city. That resolution was quickly scuttled when a promo showed the young man who plays De Niro's son falling for a black girl. In one clip he asks for permission to kiss her (no salt-and-pepper date rape here, folks!), which he accomplishes in a most decorous manner. Afterward she retorted, "That wasn't a kiss; this is a kiss." Whereupon she grabs him by the back of his head and plants her ample, open mouth on his in a more spirited fashion.

Chatting with Brokaw later, the young man admitted that the extensive and vigorous smooching had raised a good deal of curiosity among his contemporaries, "Wha'd she feel like?" "Was she real hot?" The response, somewhat evasive, was nevertheless PC. "But like I tell 'em all, cut somebody, they bleed; we're all alike."

After digesting that enlightening pontification, Brokaw asked De Niro: "Did you choose a black girl because several of your [only the slightest pause here] relationships have been with women of color?" "Mmm. Some of the most beautiful children in the world are a mixture." The camera then panned to several lively young mulattos. "Like yours?" "Mmm."

Instaurationists may want to avoid A Bronx Tale and urge their friends to do likewise.

From Zip 220. The squeaky-close Clinton victory in the budget vote prompted CNN's Moneyline Lou Dobbs to probe into the thinking of Chosenite Congressperson Marjorie Margolies-Mezvinsky (D-PA) who switched from nay to aye at the last minute. Explaining she had been won over by a call from Mr. Slick himself, MM-M added, "He promised me he'd hold a debate on entitlements. And entitlements are the key to this whole budget mess!"

"That's it? That's all it took?," declared the incredulous Dobbs, whose blond handsomeness contrasted sharply with the beaky, bird-like movements of the Congresswoman.

"As I said, entitlements are everything!"

Sensing he wouldn't be getting any greater candor from Marjorie, Dobbs turned away in disbelief and swiveled towards Myron Kandel, the show's live-in economist and very much a racial ally of the lady just interviewed. "Well, Myron, what do you make of that?"

"Frankly, Lou, I thought your line of questioning was out of line. She was right to answer the way she did." Glaring in Celtic anger, first at Myron and then straight into the camera, Dobbs growled, "Thanks, traitor."

From Zip 981. Have you heard the Republican presidential wannabe Jack Kemp speak lately? I saw the bench-warmer on the Larry King show. With a fawning glance at Larry, he eagerly included Elie Wiesel in a list of democracy's great heroes. He knew teacher was watching!

Notes from the Sceptred Isle—John Nobull

Henry Wadsworth Longfellow (1807-82) wrote a sentimental poem, The Jewish Cemetery at Newport, which shows up frequently in anthologies. It is full of sympathy for the poor Jews pursued relentlessly by "Christian hate," but fails to mention one important detail. Providence, in the same state as Newport, was the organising centre of the triangular slave trade between West Africa, the Caribbean and the American South. Many of the Jews in that very churchyard had played a key part in that trade.

Longfellow's poem reflects an attitude common among those who cherish the Bible as the basis of their religion. As less sophisticated Christians used to sing:

*It was good for the Hebrew children,
It was good for the Hebrew children,
It was good for the Hebrew children,

In America, Presbyterians, Quakers, Baptists, Methodists and Unitarians forged ahead economically and socially, while American Episcopalians, the religious elite, lacked the High Church wing which was so influential in England. In England, Bible Protestants were referred to as Nonconformists. Even now, with the exception of the Quakers, they remain solidly lower middle class. Only in Scotland did the Presbyterians manage to build themselves into the national church. In England the Puritans of the 17th century, most of whom who were also Presbyterians, lost out as a social force. Their role was taken over by the Nonconformists who became the mainstay of the Liberal and Labour parties.

Ideas have consequences. I'm afraid it's very difficult to regard the Bible as divinely inspired without developing a reverence for the People of the Book, though certain Scripture buffs claim that they themselves are the People of the Book, British Israelites, Identity Christians and the Aryan Nation members. Similarly, if you have a constitution which proclaims the equality of all mankind as a self-evident truth, no amount of reference to Jefferson's slaves will prevent that principle from working itself out to its logical conclusion—all races are the same.

Longfellow not only failed to see the faults of the Jews; he also failed to recognise their staying power. He saw them as reading history "backward, like a Hebrew book," and opined that they had had their day. As he put it, "[D]ead nations never rise again." Like Arnold Toynbee, he thought of Judaism as a relic of the ancient world, which is what it would surely have remained if it had not been that the Majority's addiction to the Book enabled the Jews to fasten their parasitic feelers on Majority economies.

In America, Roman Catholicism is largely ethnic and Catholics had only a minor role in preserving and cherishing English and Scottish traditions. In the 16th and 17th centuries those who refused to attend the Anglican church and could afford the consequent fines, were mostly gentry—just as the Copts of Egypt, who had to pay taxes to the Muslim Caliph, were almost by definition members of the higher taxpaying classes. English and Scottish Catholicism, typically traditional, in no way resembled the Irish kind, which slowly and reluctantly became wedded to republicanism. Back in the 17th century there were no Catholic republicans outside the Italian city states.

In the time of Elizabeth and James I, English Catholics like Babington and Fawkes tried to kill the monarch. In the 18th century they became much more loyal to king and country. An undercurrent of anti-Catholicism among the Bible Protestants was whipped up in the 1660s by the renegade Titus Oates; in the 1770s by Lord George Gordon. The latter, incidentally, became a Jew, took the name of Israel bar Abraham, was circumcised and kept his foreskin in a box.

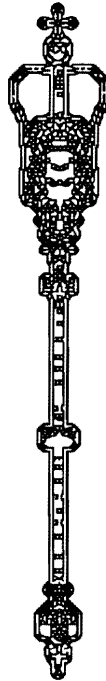

The great prophet of medievalism in the 19th century was Sir Walter Scott, who felt with great passion that rejection of the feudal and Catholic traditions of medieval Scotland had led to a progressive impoverishment of Scottish cultural life.

Long before Catholic Emancipation was achieved by Daniel O'Connell with the wholehearted support of an Anglican parson, the Reverend Sydney Smith, the G.K. Chesterton of his time, Catholicism was a constant undercurrent in English intellectual life. Ben Jonson, John Donne and John Dryden were all Catholics at one time or another. Alexander Pope was always a Catholic, albeit a pronounced deist.

Even today, the rift of dislike between English and Irish Catholics leads to friction. English Catholics have long been more inclined to support the royalist Protestants of Northern Ireland than were the republican Catholics. Upper-class Catholics, educated at the prestigious Benedictine monastic school of Ampleforth and its sister colleges at Downside and Fort Augustus, used to be traditional in every sense. During and after the war, the headmaster of Ampleforth was a certain Father Paul Neville, 6' 4", with piercing blue eyes, who was chairman of the conference of public (private) schools for the whole of Britain. People who knew him well claim that, like George Washington, he never told a lie. A direct descendant of Warwick the Kingmaker, he was one of the very few proud possessors of the Victoria Cross. Back in the 1950s, the Oxford magazine, Cherwell, complained about the "arrogance" of Ampleforth men, who felt such contempt for modern liberal opinion.

During WWII the Quaker school of Bootham was evacuated to Ampleforth. Lord Lovat, the commando leader whose Lovat Scouts knocked out the German guns that were massacring the Canadians on the beach at Dieppe in 1943, has left us an impressive portrait of Father Paul in his autobiography, March Past. Lovat was a Highland chieftain, like a number of other boys at Ampleforth. Nairac, the SAS officer murdered by the IRA, was another product of Ampleforth.

Father Paul was followed as headmaster of Ampleforth by the egregious Father Basil Hume, who proceeded to undermine the good work done by his predecessor. Hume was all for Vatican II. Now a cardinal, he is much more interested in ministering to coloured immigrants than to native English or Scottish Catholics. Today, like most other forms of Christianity, Roman Catholicism is rotten to the core, but that should not blind us to the Church's former role in maintaining the link with the feudal and ecclesiastical system that united Europe intellectually during the Middle Ages.

Canada. Paul Reichmann is back in business. The "brains" of the highly publicized Reichmann brothers, whose Olympia & York real estate empire crashed into bankruptcy leaving investors, banks and suppliers a billion or so dollars in the hole, has a new partner, George Soros, the Hungarian-Jewish currency speculator. Soros is pumping $525 million into the deal, a tidy little sum to help a racial cousin get back in the black. In any civilized society the Reichmanns would be in jail for their previous devious operations. Instead, by the device of bankruptcy they have managed to keep a goodly portion of their fortune. No doubt they will soon be luring more suckers into another of their "brilliant" real estate ventures.

A Canadian-Jewish wheeler-stealer who has not been as astute as the Reichmanns, Leonard Rosenberg was handed a five-year jail sentence for committing 13 frauds in the sale of more than 10,000 apartment units. Compared to the Reichmanns, Rosenberg is a piker. He only caused Canadians to lose upwards of $100 million.

No one can call Ernst Zündel a quitter. In recent months the doughty German Canadian has taken to the air waves, radio as well as TV, to pursue his revisionist crusade. His Jewish enemies, having managed to cut off his satellite program, are now working to shut down his radio broadcasts. Chances are they will be successful. But, as they have discovered, it's hard to keep Ernst down. Punching him in one place, he'll pop up, like a pillow, in another.

As columnist Doug Collins reported, 3,000 Somalis who live in a one-block area of a Toronto suburb, were greatly disturbed when a "brother" was given a ticket. The crowd of muddlings grew so ugly, a security guard had to call for reinforcements. Some brought dogs, one of which must have been a racist because it bit a Somali lady. The obligatory riot ensued, including a mass blockade of a road to a nearby airport.

Britain. Robert the Bruce, King of Scotland, was at the end of his tether. His wife was languishing in captivity, his brother had been executed and he himself was little better than a fugitive. He was just about to surrender his throne and go off to the Holy Land to fight the Saracens when his attention was drawn to a spider suspended by a long thread that was endeavoring to swing from one roof beam to another to lay the foundation for its web. Six times the spider tried, and six times he failed. Realizing that he had lost six battles, Robert the Bruce watched the spider succeed on his seventh try. Heartened by the persevering insect, Robert donned his helmet, took to the field and, after a severe struggle, won back his crown and his kingdom.

Today's Robert Bruce is John Tyndall, who has also stayed the course, despite libel and slander, jail and physical assaults. He is determined to save his beloved Britain from the politics and politicians that in less than a century have turned history's greatest empire into a shabby and discombobulated little island kingdom.

After founding the National Front, he had it stolen away from him by shady egotists and connivers who put themselves ahead of party and country. Refusing to give up, John started a new group, the British National Party. Slowly, methodically and unflinchingly, against all odds, he built it to the point where BNP member, Derek Beackon, actually won a council seat in a by-election in a London borough. The Labour candidate came in a close second; the Tory a disastrous fourth.

Brits are getting fed up with weird people with weird names and esoteric backgrounds getting the biggest slices of the welfare and public housing pies. The British majority, like its American counterpart, is being relentlessly dispossessed by a pack of cowardly politicians, a renegade media, minority racists and a Mandarin caste of cultural degenerates.

In England, as in other "democratic" countries, democracy fails the test when self-professed proponents lose elections. As expected, the losers did not take their defeat lying down. A few days after the election Tyndall's enemies launched the biggest riot London had seen in 15 years. Some 20,000 protestors battled police in an attempt to destroy the bookshop that served as BNP headquarters. At least 10 bobbies were injured.

However you look at it, it's three cheers for Derek Beackon, six cheers for the British National Party and 100 cheers for John Tyndall, a latter-day Robert Bruce who had every reason to throw in the towel, but has held on in the face of every dirty trick his persecutors could play on him. If Britain was a true democracy, Tyndall would now be an M.P. If Britain was a true democracy, the Asians and blacks who are transforming Shakespeare's "other Eden" into a racist quagmire would be on the first boat home.

France. Solzhenitsyn uttered some truthful but upsetting words to 30,000 Frenchmen at a gathering decrying the fearful massacres that took place in the French Revolution. Asserting that revolutions do not regenerate human nature, the man who is probably the wisest if not the most gifted living writer, said that such clichés as liberty, equality and fraternity "are intrinsically contradictory and unfeasible." "Liberty," he added, "destroys social equality. Equality restrains liberty."

Solzhenitsyn is building a home on the outskirts of Moscow on land once given to Jewish commissar Lazar Kaganovich by his good buddy, Josef Stalin. He's expected to move in next year. His return to Mother Russia will be worth watching. Some Russians say he is old hat. Others believe he will help bring order out of chaos and set Russia on a path that might make it the last-ditch savior of the white race, which is in decline everywhere else.

Germany. An Afghan grocer smeared Nazi symbols and slogans on his shop, then proceeded to burn it down. The local press, after falling for the story, had to reverse itself. Following a thorough investigation, the authorities arrested and charged the Afghan with arson, attempted murder and insurance fraud. As minority members scattered throughout the Western world have learned, if they want to commit a crime, the first thing they must do is get themselves a paint brush and paint a swastika on the home they want to burn down or on the door of the apartment of the woman they want to rape. Then it's chez le Nazi in the headlines, and the perpetrator will be the last person to be suspected of the crime.

German captains of industry have once again caved in to Jewish am-twisters. They have pledged $43 million to spruce up Auschwitz, which is falling into disrepair. One would think that rich Jews would be more than happy to shell out the marks required to maintain what they say is the goriest death camp. But since all they have to do is snap their fingers for German industrialists to lie down and roll over, Jews probably figure they can do more for their racial cause by financing the building of Holocaust museums and memorials in non-German territory. In addition to eternalizing Auschwitz, Germans are also being squeezed to contribute to a Holocaust museum in Berlin on the model of the one in Washington (DC).

Democracy at Work

•At a gathering of old comrades in Innsbruck last year, Markus Ertl, a veteran of the Waffen SS, announced over a loudspeaker that only 74,000 people died in Auschwitz, most of them done in by disease or American bombers. A judge in "democratic" Austria sentenced him to a year in jail.

•In "democratic" Italy, police arrested Franco Freda, 52. His crime? He was the founder of the Fronte Nazionale (National Front).

•In "democratic" Germany, Erhard Kemper, 64, a onetime member of the Free German Workers Party, was sentenced to a year in jail for calling the Holocaust "a lie."

Poland. In answer to Uzi Narkiss, a professional Jewish avenger who wants to convoke an international tribunal to stage show trials of anti-Holocaust historians, David Irving and Robert Faurisson, the Polish Historical Society rebuffed his claim that only 5,000 Jews remain in Poland. The Society stated that 500,000 Polish Jews died after being deported to Siberia in 1939-40, and 500,000 more expired in Nazi hands. After WWII, 750,000 Polish Jews emigrated to Palestine (later Israel), and another 750,000 went West, many to America. Still another 750,000 remained in Communist Poland, where they soon monopolized most of the country's top jobs.

Today, the Polish Historical Society attests, despite what Narkiss claims, Poland is the home not of 5,000 but of 1 million Jews, a number that has escaped Jewish headcounters in the West because after WWII Polish Jews decided that they could greatly improve their lot if they took Slavic names. Such Jews include Adam Michnik, Jacek Kurson and Artur Howzan, who are now riding high in the present-day Polish power structure.

Russia. Instaurationists who have a copy of The Dispossessed Majority might reread the last paragraph in the chapter on the Soviet Union:

It is . . . not the Soviet Union of Lenin that the United States and the West have to fear. It is the Russia of the Pan-Slav Dostoyevsky, a far greater genius with a much sharper eye for the shape of tomorrow.

This was written in 1972, almost two decades before the breakup of the U.S.S.R. and remained unchanged in subsequent revised editions of The Dispossessed Majority. (The next is scheduled for Fall 1994.)

The Russia of Dostoyevsky may not be too far in the offing. The struggle for democracy, as the Western literati like to define it, is a sham. The average Russian has hardly one drop of democratic blood in his veins. Having endured what might be described as a foreign occupation in the 1917-89 period, what Russians want is an all-Russian government. The Czar or whatever they will call their future leader is not likely to be a Westernizer on the order of Peter the Great or Gorbachev, but a late 20th-century version of Ivan Grozny (Ivan the Terrible).

It would not surprise Dostoyevsky if Russians, with their bulging arsenal of nuclear bombs, might decide at the whim of some half-mad general to do a little ethnic cleansing as their Slavic brothers, the Serbs, have been doing in Bosnia. Those of us in the West should not complain. Having degenerated into a cultureless, formless, inert mass of wimpish semi-barbarians, we have made a world that is in dire need of cleansing.

As anti-Yeltsin demonstrators chanted, "Beat kikes, Save Russia," foreign journalists were decidedly uncomfortable when they were informed by anti-Semitic Muscovites, "Jews are flourishing everywhere in Russia while we are dying. They control everything. Yeltsin is a puppet in their hands."

No wonder the Russian Federation of Jewish Organizations firmly supported the Russian president. As the Jewish Telegraph Agency reported, "The future that Russian Jews prefer is that favored by Mr. Yeltsin, who envisions a rapid transition to a Western-style democracy and economy." This transition, it should be noted, is not necessarily the desire of all non-Jewish Russians. After 70 years of serfdom at the hands of thuggish Communist ideologues, Russian majority members are not overjoyed at having their future controlled and shaped by Muscovite versions of the ADL and Michael Milken.

Authorities report that a former employee of the Russian National Library in St. Petersburg stole the cream of its collection of medieval Jewish manuscripts. The alleged thief, who was allowed to emigrate as a "refugee" before the thefts were discovered, managed to pilfer the documents over a period of years. A number of them have turned up at auctions around the world. One manuscript offered in New York City recently had an asking price of $10 million. Early last year the Israel Museum in Jerusalem bought part of the collection, "without realizing it was stolen."

Between 1934 and 1947 some 15 million people languished or died in the Soviet Gulags and labor colonies (according to Russian historian Viktor Zemskov). From January 1, 1935 to June 22, 1941, 19,840,000 "enemies of the people" were arrested; 7 million of the unfortunates were shot and most of the others died while incarcerated (figures provided by Olga Shatanovskaya, onetime head of Khrushchev Rehabilitation Commission). "From 1929 to 1953, 21.5 million people were repressed, of them a third were shot, the rest sentenced to imprisonment, where many also died" (General Volkogonov, head of the Parliamentary Commission on Rehabilitation). Between 1941 and 1946, 2 million members of nationality groups were deported, a quarter of whom died. Add to the above number 10 million who expired in the 1930-33 famine and you have what contemporary Russians call not the Six Million but the Twenty Million (N.Y. Review of Books, Sept. 23, 1993).

James Bacque, the Canadian historian, whose book, Other Losses, accused General Eisenhower of brutally starving vast numbers of German POWs to death during and after WWII, has been in Russia digging up some figures on Soviet losses in the "Good War." In trying to account for the 1,700,000 Germans listed as missing, he found that Stalin had taken some 4.1 million prisoners, 2.4 million of whom were Germans. Of this number, 450,600 died and the rest were sent home. This left 1,249,400 German prisoners still not accounted for. Bacque estimates 100,000 to 200,000 died in Poland, Yugoslavia and other countries. The remainder of the German prisoners died in Western prison camps, which fits in with Bacque's thesis in Other Losses. In the midst of his research, Bacque discovered that the number of Polish officers who died at the hands of Russians at Katyn totaled 21,000 not 14,000.

Israel. It's no secret that Instauration has never been overly enthused about Jewry, that strange human conglomerate known to be somewhat leech-like in its behavior. Some recent news from Jerusalem, however, has caused the hard heart of Instauration's editor to soften a little, if not towards Jews in general, then at least towards Jews of the Orthodox persuasion, members of which barricaded the entrance to the Wailing Wall with chairs and tables when they heard it was scheduled to be a stop on Michael Jackson's sightseeing tour.

"Don't desecrate the Sabbath," shouted the black-hatted, curly side-burned Yahweh worshippers as they prepared to keep the gloved and orange-lipsticked freak out of their religion's most sacred spot.

Michael Jackson is not the Golden Calf that old-fangled Israelites finally got around to destroying in biblical days. But he is a revered icon of what can only be described as animal worship. Orthodox Jews would have none of Michael, who likes to share his bed with young blond boys. For their putdown of Jackson these somber anti-fans of the bleached jerk-dancer deserve the thanks of all of us, even if it means letting down our guard and being pro-Semitic for a spell.

Shortly after the Jackson visitation, Madonna swept into Israel, booking an entire floor of a hotel in Tel Aviv, which she praised as Israel's "holy city." To many Orthodox Jews, Tel Aviv is on a par with Sodom and Gomorrah.

Yahweh's Land of Milk and Honey is being flooded by citizenship applications from Africans and Asians claiming to be descended from the Lost Tribes of the ancient Hebrews. The influx has provoked the Minister of Immigration to suggest that the Law of Return—which bestows immediate citizenship on Jews from anywhere in the world—needs amending. In early August, several dozen Indian nationals belonging to the Shin Lung tribe showed up in Israel, asserting that they are descendants of the Hebrew Menashes. They had been "reconverted" to Judaism by Israeli rabbis who had traveled to the India-Burma border, where the Shin Lung live. A Menashe spokesman said that 1.5 million of them would like to convert and move to Israel, where they would immediately be entitled to lavish benefits—underwritten by American taxpayers, we need hardly add—unavailable in the Indian subcontinent.

Some believe a more subtle economic motive is behind the latest refugee push. Earlier this year, the Israeli government banned West Bank settlers from employing cheap Arab labor, after several Jews were killed by day workers. The law now provides that Jewish West Bankers can only employ Israelis. Immigration Minister Yair Ysaban suspects, "Certain parties are willing to come to the point where, in order to bring in foreign workers, they will even convert people."

Super-embezzler Michael Milken, sans toupée, got a royal welcome in Israel, now that he is out of jail and supposed to be spending most of his time in community service. (Does community service in Israel count?) At Milken's right are fellow Jews Danny Arnold, a Hollywood producer, Steve Lawrence, a washed-up entertainer, and Jerusalem Mayor Teddy Kolek.

Somalia and Haiti. Someone with a key to the White House should leave a copy of Joseph Conrad's Heart of Darkness on Hillary and Bill's bedside table. Conrad does a magnificent job recounting his white character's step-by-step descent into barbarism as he tries to adapt to African ways.

What happens to the individual white in black Africa can happen to a white army. Even if American troops stationed there avoid physical death and injury, they are certain to be mentally scarred. When they return to the U.S., they will bring their psychological infections with them and spread them among the population at large. There is something about black Africa and the people that come from black Africa that coarsens white sensibilities. Wherever Negroes happen to land, whatever the different political and social environments, whether they do or don't thrive, they are a dead weight on the rest of us. Their mere presence induces us to act and behave in a manner alien to our own ethos.

To put white troops in a black African nation, any black African nation, is, militarily speaking, a guaranteed Pyrrhic victory. If we send in enough armed forces, we will surely win in the short run. But when the time comes to leave, the soldiers who are white will carry back with them something they can never shake off, an incurable, slow-acting cancer that eats away at their spiritual innards.

Clinton's intervention in Somalia and threatened intervention in Haiti puts us all at risk. It amounts to the contamination by association spelled out so brilliantly by Conrad. We must ask you, Mr. President, to keep the race of light away from the heart of darkness.

Africa. A trio of self-confessed witches has received five-year prison terms and fines of around $5,500 each in the Ivory Coast after being convicted of cannibalism. Yvonne Deagbeu Sake, Helene Toun Manou and Mose Kpea ate four folks, among them Manou's son Oulai. The incident came to the attention of the authorities after residents of the village of Gahatou, accused Sake and Manou of killing a boy with magic. Manou, who complained to the police that she was being slandered, admitted eating the boy after his death.

Australia. The Chief Minister for the Northern Territory, Mr. Perron, has called for increased Asian immigration. The "conservative" white official said that Australia's relatively small white population was "a luxury" the nation can no longer afford. Referring to Northern Australia with a population of only 1 million. Perron remarked that it is "time to recognize that a sparsely settled Australia is an anachronism."

Last year, legal immigration to Australia was cut by 40%, partly because of an economic downturn. Perron stated that when the economy revives, "I would like to see immigration, especially from the Asia Pacific, restored to pre-recession levels and eventually increased to boost our population growth."

Perron's statements drew fire from Kalgoorlie M.P. Graeme Campbell, who pointed out, "Australians overwhelmingly want lower immigration, an end to multiculturalism and a stop to Asianisation." Campbell noted that the postwar White Australia immigration policy, abandoned in the 1980s, had given Australia the highest standard of living in the world. "But we've changed our policy now and our standard of living has fallen. At the same time, they [Asian countries] have kept their [racial exclusion] policy. . . ."

Philippines. Japanese occupation troops that hid out in the mountains until their capture in 1947 have been charged with having eaten nearly 100 Filipinos. The families of 80 of the allegedly consumed tribesmen are planning to file formal charges demanding millions of dollars in compensation, according to their lawyer, Israel Damasco. He and Japanese human rights lawyers have obtained nearly 30 affidavits from victims' families, who contend that their relatives were cooked in pots or roasted in pits by Japanese servicemen.
